GET SHUBERT BOOKINGS

Best Attractions of Independent Houses Will be Here this Season.

AND ALL K. & E. SHOWS

Partial List of Fine Productions to Be Offered Local Theatre—Goes By Mr. Counihan.

The presentation of "Brown of Harvard" at the New Plainfield theatre Saturday night, marked the appearance at the local playhouse of the first of what is known in the amusement world as the "Independent" or Shubert attractions, hitherto not obtainable by the management. Because of the war which has existed between the booking magnates, Klaw & Erlanger and the Shuberts, the shows controlled by one concern could not appear in houses booked by the other but a truce was recently declared which permits an interchange in designated territory. Plainfield has been receiving only the Klaw & Erlanger, or "Syndicate" attractions, but is included in the new policy and hereafter will get all the productions the Independents put out.

This means the attractions appearing at the Lyric, Casino, Belasco and Lew Fields' theatres, controlled by the Shuberts, will come to this city and add to the dramatic entertainment of the local public. Beside "Brown of Havard," which was originally produced at the Princess theatre, converted during the past summer to a flat building, some of the stars and plays now to be admitted to the New Plainfield theatre are DeWolf Hopper, Eddie Foy, David Warfield, Adele Ritchie, "Fascinating Flora," "The White Hen," "The Social Whirl," "Fantana," "The New York Idea," "The Great Divide" and many others.

The selection of Plainfield as one of the cities to be included in the merger speaks well for the standing Manager Counihan's house has with the booking agents, not to mention the manager himself.. It is looked upon as one of the most important "one-night" stands in the country and is becoming as well known on Broadway as any in the East. This is due to the fact that Mr. Counihan has never let up in his progressive policy and has seen to it that the retudns justified the recognition.

The bookings for the coming fall will make it a needless journey to go to New York for the best there is in the amusement line as the following partial list will show: September 7, Amelia Bingham, in her new play, "A Modern Lady Godiva;" 10, Alberta Gallatin in "Judith of the Plains;" 11, Marie Cahill in "Marrying Mary;" 12, Hap Ward in "Not Yet, But Soon;" 13, William Collier in "Caught in the Rain,' which ran for a year in New York; 14, "The Red Feather;" 16, "The Lion and the Mouse;" 17, Adelaide Thurston in "The Girl from Out Yonder;" 18, John Griffin in "Richard Third;" 21, DeWolf Hopper in "Happyland;" 23, Dave Lewis in "About Town;" 26, Al Leech in "Girls Will Be Girls;" 28, "The Gingerbread Man;" 30, William and Thomas Jefferson in "The Rivals;" October 1, Robert Mantell, who is already looked upon as Richard Mansfield's successor; 5, Max Figman in "The Man on the Box" 12, Grace Cameron in "Little Dolly Dimples;" 14, Mary Mannering in "Glorious Betsy;" 15, "Woodland;" 21, "The Earl and the Girl;" 22, Cole and Johnson; 23, "The Virginian;" 29, Nat Goodwin.

THUMPED AN EX-COP.

Berlowitz Tried to Help Patrolman McGinley, and Came to Grief.

James Hamilton, forty-six years old, and Thomas McHugh, thirty-one years, both machinists living at 22 West Second street, got into a fight on Richmond street, Saturday night. Somebody telephoned for the police, and Patrolman Arthur McGinley was sent up. He nabbed McHugh, but Hamilton ran off.

Former Special Officer Harry Berlowitz, who saw Hamilton escape, went after him. He caught up with the fugitive, and tried to arrest him. Hamilton is handy with his fists and knocked the ex-near-cop galley west. McGinley bagged him later, without any trouble. Sentence was suspended in both cases by Judge Runyon in the city court yesterday morning.

Negro and Negress Fight.

Thomas Johnson and Sarah Scott, both colored, were arrested Saturday night for fighting at 666 South Second street, where the woman lives. Johnson charged the woman with conducting a disorderly house in court yesterday morning, and Judge Runyon laid over the case to admit of full investigation. The hearing will be resumed tomorrow morning. W. G. DeMeza is the woman's lawyer.

MIDDLESEX CO IS RICHER

Ratables Increase More Than $5,000,000 Over Last Year's Total.

PERTH AMBOY BOOMING

Over Fifty Per Cent. of the Increase Found There — Dunellen Is $33,000 Better Off Than a Year Ago.

After long, tiresome sessions over the tax books, the Middlesex County Tax Board has finally finished its work, and its report shows that the county ratables for 1907 are $51,603,822, an increase of $5,046,337 over last year. Perth Amboy is now more than four millions ahead of New Brunswick.

In Dunellen, the net ratables total to $737,775, $657,795 real estate and $79,800 personal. The net for 1906 was $704,525. In Piscataway township, the net valuation jumped $208,879, totalling to $2,858,874 for 1907—$2,029,095 in real estate and $829,779 in personal ratables. Metuchen shows a net increase of $56,080, with a net of $1,369,634. Of this $1,205,089 is real estate. At Raritan the net valuation of $1,098,569 is an increase of $32,935, the real estate ratables being $1,049,674. The totals for the county are $51,603,822 to $46,557,485 in 1906.

With the possible exception of Woodbridge township, the actual amount of money to be paid for taxes will be far below last year. This is largely due to the fact of the reduction in the county tax rate on account of the change in the fiscal year, which enables the Board of Freeholders to make a budget for eight months' expenses instead of expenses for the full year.

SAVED COUNTRY CLUB FROM DANGEROUS FIRE

DAVID SHAY AND AN ASSISTANT CHECKED A THREATENING BLAZE.

Sparks from the chimney set fire to the handsome clubhouse of the Plainfield Country Club, Sunday afternoon, threatening total destruction of the building. Prompt discovery of the blaze and the heroic work of David Shap, superintendent, and one of his assistants, prevented great damage. Mr. Shay was getting things in readiness for Labor Day, when a large number of members and their guests were entertained, and he had built a fire in the clubhouse, using wood for fuel.

Soon after the fire was started it was noticed that sparks were shooting out of the chimney. This, together, with a strong odor of smoke led Mr. Shay to investigate. He quickly discovered a lively blaze on the roof over the front porch. He hastened to get fire extinguishers and by the time he reached the roof the fire was burning briskly. But with the assistance of one of the boys about the clubhouse he soon had it under control and extinguished the blaze, but not until a large hole was burned in the roof.

At first it was believed that it would be necessary to call the fire department, but upon second thought Mr. Shay realized that the distance from headquarters would render the firemen's services almost useless, and besides the clubhouse being in Middlesex county that fact presented another difficulty. That the blaze did not do more damage seemed almost miraculous. It is believed that $100 will cover the damage.

Upheld His Honor.

Harry Bundy, colored, twenty-nine years old, of 218 Richmond street, was arrested Saturday night for fighting with George VanBlake, also colored. When arraigned before Judge Runyon yesterday morning he said that he had found VanBlake fussing around his wife Saturday night, and went at him to uphold his honor. He said he found VanBlake at the house again Sunday night. Judge Runyon suspended sentence and warned VanBlake to stay away from the Bundy domicile.

Funeral of Robert Walker.

The funeral service of Robert Walker was held from the late home on New street, yesterday afternoon. In the absence of Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, of the First Baptist church, of which Mr. Walker was a member, Rev. J. W. Musson, of Faith chapel, conducted the service. The burial was in Hillside cemetery.

CLOSE FRESH AIR HOME

Last Service of the Season Held There Sunday Afternoon.

GIFT FOR DR. CURRIE

Philanthropic Physician Receives Gold Watch Fob—Praise For Miss Florence G. Hawkins.

The last of the season's services at the Netherwood Fresh Air Home was held in the auditorium at the grounds Sunday afternoon, and the camp is now closed after its fifth year in this city. The children from New York, in charge of Miss Sara Curry, matron at the camp, and George Thresher, of New York city, were taken back to their homes yesterday morning. George E. Hall, of the camp committee, carried them to the Netherwood station in his automobile. There were about 300 of them. The camp was taxed to its utmost capacity to accommodate the little New Yorkers this year, for, though originally intended to accommodate 150 at most, there have been about 300 there most of the time.

Rev. E. E. Roberson, of the Monroe Avenue church, was the speaker at the camp for the closing meeting. George E. Hall was in charge of the meeting; there was prayer by J. D. Loizeaux and a short address of farewell by Frederick Sutro, of New York. In behalf of the mothers at the camp, Dr. H. S. Saubray, of New York, presented Dr. N. W. Currie with a handsome gold watch fob, set with diamonds as a token of their gratefulness for the medical assistance he has rendered gratuitously to the sick ones during the summer. Dr. Currie has been the "camp physician" for the past five years with the children, and has handled some serious cases among the babies and younger children.

Music was a feature of the service. Miss Florence G. Hawkins and Mrs. Ada Cumming sang "Speak to My Soul," Mary Miller, one of the New York children,sang "Dear to the Heart of the Shepherd," and Elsie and Helen Tudor, two of the children, sang "God Will Take Care of You." Miss May Voorhees was at the organ.

In a short address, summarizing the work of the various committees, George E. Hall spoke enthusiastically of the faithfulness of Miss Florence G. Hawkins, chairman of the devotional committee. Miss Curry spoke briefly, thanking those who had worked for the camp, or given financial assistance for the support of her work in New York.

Tingley Reunion.

The sixth annual reunion of the Tingley family was held at the residence of "Uncle" John Tingley, Dunellen, yesterday. A bountiful dinner was served. "Uncle John," who recently suffered a light paralytic stroke was able to be up and sat at the table with the company.

Dr. R. Waldo Emerson, of Park avenue, has returned to this city, after his summer vacation.

PERKINS' ACCUSATIONS ARE DENIED BY SMITH

ITALIAN YOUTH SHOT ON HIS WAY HOME

POLICE DISCREDIT HIS STORY OF AN AMBUSH—NOT SERIOUSLY HURT.

Mattia Imboglutti, 17 years old, a laborer employed by E. M. French, and who lives on Terrill road, is lying at his home with a bullet wound in his left groin. He says he was shot from ambush Saturday night, but the police don't take any stock in the story.

Chief Kiely learned of the shooting Saturday night, two hours after it took place, from County Physician Westcott, who was summoned by the family to attend the wounded youth. He started an investigation at once and learned that Imboglutti, in company with Angelo Giffordo, 18 years old, was returning home from work at 7 o'clock when the shooting took place The shot was fired while the youths were walking near Leland avenue. Chief Kiely could find no place within revover shot, in the open field across which they had walked, that showed signs of an amperscade. He is convinced that the shooting resulted from skylarking with a revolver, and that the boys hit on the ambush story as one that could most save them from trouble. Imboglutti is not dangerously hurt.

CONVENTION DELEGATES OPPOSED TO PERKINS

MAJORITY INSTRUCTED TO VOTE AGAINST HIS RENOMINATION.

An inspection of the petitions filed in the rural districts of the county shows that Assemblyman Randolph Perkins will have his work cut to secure a renomination, as a majority of the delegates nominated have been instructed to vote against him in the convention. Westfield alone of the rural districts, being the Assemblyman's home town, stood loyal, giving its four delegates instructions to vote for his renomination.

The delegates from Cranford and Roselle will favor the nomination of Carleton M. Pierce, of Cranford, who has been put forward as a successor to Perkins and who, from present indications, has a good chance of winning out. The delegation in Roselle Park and Garwood are uninstructed. Perkins is sure of 16 of the 27 delegates from Plainfield. He has but few from Elizabeth.

County Chairman Stamps as False Assemblyman's Assertions.

HE MADE NO DEALS

Frank H. Smith Relates the Conversations He Had With Tillman As to Another Position.

Unequivocal denial was made by County Chairman Frank H. Smith today of the assertions reflecting on him as made by Assemblyman Randolph Perkins at the New Idea mass meeting here on Friday night. Mr. Smith in substance declares as false the allegation that he told Mr. Tillman some time ago that the organization was against both him and Mr. Perkins and that in consideration of his resignation from the assembly he would get him any appointment.

"It had not been my intention to dignify such scurrilous statements by an answer but as it appears that damage may be done the Republican cause by silence on my part, I have decided to nail the story as absolutely false. That I ever gave Mr. Tillman any promise of preferment in return for the delivery of any delegates or for his resignation from the assembly or for his declination to run again, I most emphatically deny. It was either in February or March, I am not sure which, that I went to see Mr. Tillman while he was ill at his home in Rahway. I visited him to see how he was physically. During our conversation, Mr. Tillman asked me about his getting the appointment of inspector of denatured alcohol. He wanted that position a year previously after much to his disappointment Senator Ackerman recommended another as a member of the Board of Equalization of Taxes. Tillman could not qualify for that position the year before because he was a member of the Legislature which created the office. So last spring when the reappointments for the full terms were made, he was disappointed to find that he could not get the place. Then he became anxious to be inspector of denatured alcohol and I promised to do all I could for him. At the visit in question, I told Mr. Tillman that I had learned that he could not hold office under the United States government while holding the State office that he did. In reply, he said that he wanted to resign from the assembly if it was necessary for him to do so in order to get the other job. No promise was asked about the delivery of any delegates and none was given.

"Mr. Tillman would have obtained the desired appointment in March but for his illness. When I left for the West in April he was still ill and when I returned early in July at his request I took the matter up again. A change in office in Washington made it necessary for me to deal with a new man there and the work had to be done all over again. At our meeting referred to I did not tell Mr. Tillman that the organization was against him but since that time I have told him of the sentiment against third terms and he is serving his third term at this time. I want to make it very plain that at no time was there any conversation with Mr. Tillman whereby he was to deliver the delegates of Rahway in return for this appointement. For corroboration of my version of the conversation I refer you to Mr. Tillman as no third party was present.

"I admit that I have interested myself in Mr. Pierce' candidacy, but I emphatically deny that I have done so at the request or suggestion of former County Chairman H. K. Kean, despite Mr. Perkins' assertions. Mr. Kean had never known and has never seen Mr. Pierce, and the interest I took in that respected member of Cranford's community was in the line of my duty as county chairman. During what Mr. Perkins is pleased to term my travels up and down the county, I found that/the Westfielder was too weak to put before the people as a candidate again and as the election is going to be a very close one, I deemed it my duty as county chairman to help in obtaining candidates who would be strong before the voters. That is all I have to say."

Fined and Warned.

Foster Sprague, twenty-nine years old, a laborer, arrested for drunkenness Saturday night, was arraigned before Judge Runyon in the city court yesterday morning. He was fined $5, and warned that the limit would be his portion the next time he appeared before the court.

Japanese Beer In India.

The demand for beer in India exceeds 11,000,000 gallons a year, with a tendency toward further increase. Of this quantity, 6,000,000 gallons are supplied by breweries in India and 5,000,000 gallons imported from other countries, 93 per cent. being supplied by England, and only 7 per cent. by other countries. During 1905, 4,000,000 gallons of Japanese beer were imported into India, and the greater part of this amount was sold on trial in and about Calcutta, little being known about Japanese beer in the neighborhood of Bombay. The Japanese Consul points out in conclusion that, as Indian merchants are beginning to direct their attention to Japanese trade, if Japanese beer were sent to India at low prices, selecting the best quality, it would be possible to extend the market of Japanese beer in India.

Ralph D'Armient, of Park avenue, is enjoying the sights at Niagara Falls and incidentally attending the "Old Home" celebration at Buffalo.

Gambling in Church.

The mania for gambling will out, no matter how carefully hedged about by the law. Here is an illustration: "It took a conversation I overheard at the close of the church service last Sunday night to bring me to a realization of the virulence of the betting fever," said a Harlem woman. "I actually heard two boys betting on the skill of the sexton in snuffing out the candles. One bet 25 cents that he would extinguish each candle at the first application of the snuffers, the other that he wouldn't. I had been watching the proceedings with the same thought in mind, but it never occurred to me to bet on the outcome."—New York Tribune.

Cuban Custom.

In Cuba a bereaved family keeps the windows of its house shut and darkened for six months. It destroys the value of the clothing on the dead and hacks the coffin before burial. This is done that there may be nothing in the grave worth thieving.

In Automobiledom.

Scientist—Light travels at the rate of about 187,000 miles a second. Chauffeur—Gee, that's goin' some! Auto Enthusiast (slightly deaf)—Pardon me, sir. But what make machine was it you just mentioned?—Bohemian.

Her Cleverness.

She—Mary Graham is certainly a very clever woman, yet she has little to say. He—That's where her cleverness comes in. She leads a man to believe that she thinks he is worth listening to.—Pick-Me-Up.

The Chaffinch.

The chaffinch is a favorite bird in Germany. It is beautiful and a fine singer. Its various colors are gray or deep blue on the neck, a reddish brown on the breast, white on the wing coverts and bluish black on the tail.

Mr. and Mrs. John M. Schorb, of Watchung avenue, left on Saturday for the Jamestown Exposition.

Mrs. Mary Stuart and daughter, Mabel, of Philadelphia, are visiting the former's son, Dr. J. A. Stuart, of Sandford avenue.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Amelia Bingham's new play, "A Modern Lady Godiva," was written especially for her by Frederick S Schrader and Lloyd M. Bingham. The popular star's role is highly emotional and demands great personal attractiveness on part of the women who portrays it—requirements easily met by Miss Bingham. Another requisite is several magnificent gowns, and in this respect, of course, Miss Bingham will not be found wanting. It may be said that in "A Modern Lady Govida" she easily maintains her firmly established reputation as the best dressed woman on the American stage. "A Modern Lady Govia" will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre, Saturday afternoon and night, September 7.

When the Cohan & Harris Comedians present George M. Cohan's big musical success, "George Washington, Jr.," in this city, Thursday afternoon and night, it will have a cast of distinct merit, including Carter De Haven, a young comedian lately identified with the Weber & Fields' productions and for years a headliner in vaudeville; Willis P. Sweatnam, of minstrel fame; Jack Rafael, John A. Boone, Frank McNish, Jr., Leona Anderson, Lulu Hoffman, John Kauffmann, Joseph Leslie, Lee Myers and Edward Lester.

John Somers Dies of Paralysis.

South Bound Brook, Sept. 3.—John Creed Somers, forty-nine years old, died at the home of his mother, Mrs. Ann Somers, in West Canal street, this place, Wednesday night, after suffering for several days with paralysis. He leaves a widow and one daughter, Miss Florence Somers, of Springfield, Mass.; his mother and one sister, Mrs. Sarah Apgar, of this place, and two brothers, George Somers, of this city, and Charles Somers, of Eureka, Ill. The funeral, conducted by Rev. Dr. Henry Stout, pastor of the Reformed church, of this place, was held at his home Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Interment was made in Bound Brook cemetery. Mr. Somers was for several years employed in New York, which position he was compelled to relinquish on account of paralysis of the limbs. For some time part he had been on the staff of the State Centre-Record, of Bound Brook.

Roselle Park Republicans' Caucus.

Roselle Park, Sept. 3.—The Republicans held a caucus Thursday night in the borough hall and prepared a ticket of candidates to be presented at the primary September 10. Captain Alfred Atkins presided and Joseph D. Lowden, Jr., was secretary of the meeting. The nominations were as follows: For councilmen, Louis V. Ebert and Frederick S. Lewis; for assessor, Thomas T. Collins; for justice of the peace, Vito Natali; for delegates to the county convention, Captain Alfred Atkins and Robert F. Hayes; for delegates to State convention, Benjamin F. Carpenter; for member of county executive committee, William A. Bernbridge.

"Oi told Casey, the contrachtor, the same t'ing," replied Mr. Dolan, "wan day whin he wor thryin' to show how brave he could be in an argymint wid 'is wife."—Washington Star.

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

Mr. Perkins' Independence.

Great stress is being laid by the Plainfield Courier-News, the newspaper which turned in a night from the most ardent championship of a change in the representation of Union county in the Assembly, to the strangely-devoted personal organ of the man whom it counseled to withdraw gracefully from the contest, on Assemblyman Perkins' "fearless independence." All of a sudden, without the slightest warning to its perplexed readers, this isolated Union county newspaper, lately supposed to be true blue to the principles of the "new idea" folks, and yesterday purple with indignitation at the suggestion that it was not "regular," finds the man it saw, as the rest did, to be too much handicapped to hope to win in this county, "an ideal candidate," "independent, fearless and determined." Instead of being overzealous to satisfy his own political ambitions, and weakened by opposition and by removal from this county, except for a legal residence, the formerly repulsed candidate has suddenly become "a man the independent voter likes," "equipped with courage," "the people's man." Without producing a particle of evidence to show that the politics of this county is "corrupt," "dominated by the voice of one" and not in favor of a "square deal," and without being able to show that anything was ever demanded of Mr. Perkins during his legislative career by the so-called machine, the bewildered Plainfield newspaper tries to identify the Westfield candidate as among the reformers.

The well-known organ of the "new idea" following, the Newark Evening News, evidently does not agree with its former fellow exponent of "new idea" principles; and there is a good deal that is unaccountable in the endorsement of Mr. Perkins by the Colbyites of the Fourth ward, in Plainfield, unless it is understood that the "new idea" movement was so dead in this county that any kind of a prop would do. The "new idea" people are against Perkins, said the Newark News the other day. His record, it pointed out, has not been pleasing to the followers of Colby. The man now posing as a reformer, "fearless and independent," and whose official career has been endorsed by the followers of Colby—a handful at least—made the mistake, said the News, of "tying up to the machine." His head was turned and he thought he must fight reform; "that he must defeat Colby and Colby measures, right or wrong; that he ought to out-regular the regulars."

"Had Assemblyman Perkins," says the recognized organ of the Colby reformers, "had the conscientious courage of Colby; had he followed the dictates of his own good judgment; had he allowed reason instead of ambition to guide him; had he thrown off the Codding influences and the machine shackles as well, Mr. Perkins might have shown traits of statesmanship and ability that would have made him a leader in fact, instead of one in name only."

So there seems to be a great deal of uncertainty about the courage and independence of Assemblyman Perkins in the minds of those forces which have been hurriedly assumed to be in his favor. Before the "new idea" folks go any farther in endorsing the Westfield candidate perhaps it would be well to take the advice of Judge Runyon, who said at the Fourth ward Colby meeting in Plainfield the other night: "I think his record should be investigated." Possibly Senator Colby might throw some light on the man who has fought him and his measures persistently, who has out-regulared the regulars. Independence in politics is a commendable thing, but it should not be confounded with surging, uncontrollable personal ambition.

The problem which faced the Republican leaders in this county was perfectly simple, in view of the fact that Mr. Perkins had lost his hold on his constituents in this county, through the fact that he has been out of the county most of the time, retaining a voting residence merely by hiring a room in Westfield, through the fact that he had incurred the strong enmity of the local option people, and owing to the fact that without good and sufficient reason there was no precedent for sending him back to the Assembly for a fourth term. The problem of the Republican leaders was to find a strong man who could, if elected, represent the county ably, as Mr. Perkins is credited with having done, and a man who without any doubt could be elected. An able lawyer, a man of scholarly attainments, of ability as a debater, a property-owner, an all-the-year-around resident of the county, and a man whose personal character not only passes muster with the people who believe that moral character is an important part of a legislator's qualifications, but which stands out as an unquestionably asset would certainly fill the bill. Such a man was found in the person of Carlton Brownell Pierce, of Cranford.—Elizabeth Journal.

Scorcher Himself.

"The venerable judge of the county doesn't fine the motorists for speeding like he used to," remarked the man in the big green touring car.

"By heck, no!" drawled the rural constable. "Yeou see, the judge took in so much in fines that, swingding it, he's gone and bought a racing automobile for himself!"—Chicago News.

The continuation of play for the Scratch cup and the competition for the Labor Day cups, Classes A and B attracted a large field to the Plainfield Country Club, yesterday. These scores were returned for the three trophies:

GOOD CARD AT THE RACES

Big Crowd Turned Out for Matinee Races Held at Driving Park.

OUT OF TOWN HORSES

Four Races and Steeplechase Have Many Entries by Horse Owners From New York, Newark and Vicinity.

A holiday card of four class races and a special steeplechase event drew an enthusiastic crowd to the local driving park yesterday afternoon, when purses to the amount of $625 were offered at the special matinee races held under the auspices of the Fair Acres Riding and Driving Association. Horse owners from New York, Jersey City, Newark, Trenton, New Brunswick, Somerville and near by towns were entered and although there had been showers in the morning, the track was in tolerable condition and about 1500 devotees of the horse turned out despite the showery conditions of the afternoon. They all had the worth of their money, as far as time goes, for the racing began at 2 o'clock and it was nearly 7 when the last event was finished.

The best race on the afternoon's card was the second, a free for all. This was a close contest between Ed. Fink's "Sir Arthur" and J. T. Langan's "Prince." Though bested in the first two heats by the local man's bay, the Newarker's black won the next three heats straight and took the purse. Mayor Smalley's "Aloysia" won all three heats in the third race, though "Brown Jug," a Newark horse, made trouble and should have finished second in all the heats. In the first heat the animal ran out through the gate from the track, into the paddock and clear around behind the grand-stand. The driver was powerless, but the horse was caught by some men in the paddock and turned back on the track, finishing the race in good style. In the other heats, the horse ran well, finishing second both times.

An event of especial interest was the steeplechase, in which four horses were entered W. H. Wildey's "Silver Twist" finished ahead, followed by Joseph Dayton's "Mid of All Work," and C. J. Fisk's "Stonewall." In the special half-mile running race L. E. Waring's horses took the honors of the field, "L'Amanda" coming in ahead in the second heat with "Yentihe" a good second. The first trial had been a dead heat. The time, 54 seconds, was the same in both.

FEMININE INTUITION.

They stood in the purple gloaming of the hazy June twilight. Above them drooped the wistaria; from afar drifted the fragrance of the dewy honeysuckles. It was an evening to inspire the heart and to thrill the soul.

"Evangeline," sighed Hector Montmorency, "I cannot begin to tell you how much I love you."

"You"—she hesitated—"you might at least try, mightn't you? If you give me but an inkling perhaps I can guess the rest."

He should have known better than to think of marrying a woman who was such a good guesser.—Judge.

Enlishing a Superior Motive.

"It's years since I've seen your wife around so much. She has always been more or less of an invalid, hasn't she?"

"Yes; but I thought it nonsense, so I told her that I would increase her allowance, she to pay her doctor's bills. She hasn't had a doctor since, nor been to his office. You see, she must have clothes. Great scheme that. It's a sure cure for fashionable invalidism.—Judge.

LIFELIKE.

Lytesute—So poor Jones, the toymaker, has gone out of his mind!

Stryppes—Yes! He had been busy for three months on a mechanical tramp, and he couldn't get it to work.

Voice of Experience.

"In mailing an article to a magazine," asked the literary tyro, "is there any peculiar way of arranging the stamps so as to convey the idea to the editor that I am an old hand?"

"You bet there is," answered Percolium. "Be sure to arrange enough of them on the inside to prepay the return postage, if you expect ever to see the article again."—Chicago Tribune.

Possible Explanation.

Said He—A scientist affirms that a woman's voice ascends to more than twice the height attained by a man's.

Said She—That probably accounts for it.

Said He—Accounts for what?

Said She—The fact that most men let their wives do all the praying for the family.—Chicago Daily News.

Stuck.

"If you don't want to go into a permanent decline," announced the physician, after making a careful examination, "you will have to tear yourself away from your business entirely."

"That's pretty hard to do, doctor," said his caller. "I am a manufacturer of porous plasters."—Chicago Tribune.

Inconsistent.

Edyth—I would never marry a man who leads a hand-to-mouth existence.

Mayme—What! Do you mean to tell me that your engagement with Fred is off?

Edyth—Certainly not. Why?

Mayme—He's a dentist, you know.—Chicago Daily News.

Advice Reciprocated.

"You must discontinue your piano practice for a time," said the doctor, "or it will send you to an untimely grave."

"Why don't you discontinue your practice, doctor?" she rejoined. "Then you wouldn't fill so many untimely graves."—Chicago Record Herald.

Time Not Wholly Wasted.

"It must be a terrible disappointment to be a defeated candidate."

"Oh, I don't know," answered the man who always tries to look on the bright side. "Sometimes it's a pretty good advertisement for a law practice or a lecture tour."—Washington Star.

Truly Remarkable.

"New York is a remarkable city, isn't it?" said the proud native.

"Yes," answered the impatient visitor, "it's the only town I ever saw where one man with a truck load of barrels could tie up an entire street car line."—Washington Star.

Those Dear Friends.

Nan—The more I see of that young Dr. Lanolin the better I like him.

Fan—He'll be pleased to hear that, I know. He tells me he is gaining in weight at the rate of a pound and a half a day.—Chicago Tribune.

Robbed!

Bill—Did a girl ever stick you with a hat-pin?

Jill—Yes, a girl stuck me with one at the church fair, the other night.—Yonkers Statesman.

Not Lucky.

Bill—Does your brother carry a rabbit's foot?

Jill—No, but he goes around with a hare-lip.—Yonkers Statesman.

GAVE HIS MESSAGE VERBATIM.

Youth's Practical Answer Shattered Court's Dignity.

Success Magazine says: It is told of the late Chauncey Shafer, who bears the same relation to New York's "anecdotage" that Sidney Smith does to London's, that he employed in his law office a stunted youth of very tractable temperament. One day Mr. Shafer returned from lunch in a lively mood, and by token of the Maderia he had consumed, summoned Billy into his private office. "Boy," he said, carelessly, "go over to the special term and see what in h—— they're up to there." The late Judge Brady was presiding over the trial of an action involving many interesting questions of substantive law. Hence, the courtroom was empty save for the litigants, their counsel and the necessary witnesses. Judge Brady's kindliness toward women and children was proverbial, and when Billy stood against the railing of the inclosure, his face barely reaching over the balustrade, the judge noticed him immediately. He interrupted the argument of counsel and turned to Billy. "Well, my lad," he said in suave, judicial accents, "what can I do for you?" "I'm from Mr. Shafer's office," Billy replied, "and he wants to know what in h—— you're up to over here."

THE "BEST MAN'S" MISTAKE.

Wedding Fee That Surely Must Have Astonished Minister.

As the young man was donning his evening suit preparatory to keeping a social engagement he ran his hand into his pocket and was surprised to find an envelope there. On opening it he discovered $25 in bills. "Now, where in thunder did I take on all this money?" he said. "It isn't mine, for I never carry my bills around in an envelope." Then he sat down to think where he had worn the suit and how he had come by the $25. "The last place I wore it," he mused finally, "was when I was best man at a wedding a month ago. But I gave the minister his money. I remember distinctly giving him something, and it must have been his fee. If I didn't give him the money, what in the world did I give him?" He called up the clergyman by 'phone. "Do you mind telling me," he asked, "what I gave you for a fee at Blank's wedding?" The answer came back very distinctly and cuttingly. "Young man, you gave me a box of vile-smelling cigarettes."

At the Same Rate.

An elderly man walked leisurely into a drug store to have a prescription filled for some trifling complaint. Receiving from the druggist a little box of about a dozen pills, he was called upon to pay about three or four times what he thought he should. The money was paid without a murmur and in silence, but, stepping off a few feet from the counter, he slowly scanned every corner of the store, almost every shelf of it, and the salesman, supposing he wanted something else, asked what he could do for him, and the reply was: "No, you can do nothing, as I'm already done for; but I'll tell you this, I've many times passed this store, but never before have been inside and made a close survey, as I have now, and, sir, I estimate you have now on hand fully $1,000,000 in stock."

Appetites of Strangers.

A waiter who always endeavored to give the best possible service to his customers supplemented an order to the kitchen attendants with the request for "a little extra in each dish." "They don't ask me for an extra allowance," he said, "in fact, they didn't know enough to ask for it, but I could see that their appetites would be equal to the supply. That is because they are strangers here. Newcomers in any restaurant or boarding house always eat more than the old-timers. Everything has a new flavor and whets their appetites. It is nothing for customers who are just getting acquainted with a place to eat as if they had been starved for a month. As a matter of fact, they have fared quite well; it's the change that makes them so voracious."

Excellence and Greatness.

In art, as in all things, a certain nuance—an abyss—separates excellence from greatness. At the Trippenhausen in Amsterdam, you see upon entering a great picture by a master whose name escapes me; it is excellent. You applaud. Turn round—that is the Night Watch, it is Rembrandt. You utter a cry. There is greatness. Excellence has vanished. You cannot even look again at the other painting. Greatness in arts is only obtained at the cost of a kind of adventure. The conquered ideal is the prize of audacity. He who risks nothing gets nothing. The genius is a hero.—From Victor Hugo's "Intellectual Autobiography."

Always the Politeness.

A Germantown woman was not long ago watching a workman as he put up new window fixtures in her house. "Don't you think that you have placed those fixtures too high?" asked she, having reference to the curtain rolls last put in place. The workman, a stolid German, made no reply, but continued to adjust the fixtures. "Didn't you hear my question?" demanded the lady of the house. "How dare you be so rude?" Whereupon the German gulped convulsively, and then replied in the gentlest of voices: "I haf my mouth full of schrews, und I could not spheak till I svallow some!"—Harper's Weekly.

She did exactly as he bade her, every movement mechanical, her eyes fastened upon his face.

"I—I reckon that was partly it," she responded at last, her voice faint and husky. Then her glance wandered away, and finally rested upon another little kneeling group a few yards farther down stream. A look of fresh intelligence swept into her face.

"Is that him?" she questioned, tremblingly. "Is—is he dead?"

"He wasn't when we first got here, but mightily near gone, I'm afraid. I've been working over you ever since."

She shook herself free and sat weakly up, her lips tight compressed, her eyes apparently blind to all save that motionless body she could barely distinguish. "Let me tell you, that fellow's a man, just the same, the gamest, pure-est man I ever saw. I [illegible] such he never said nothing about it. That's his style."

The deeply interested lieutenant removed his watchful eyes from off his charge just long enough to glance inquiringly across his shoulder. "Has the man any signs of a wound, sergeant?" he asked, loudly.

"A mighty ugly slug in the shoulder, sir; has bled scandalous, but I guess it's the very luck that's goin' to save him; seems now to be comin' out all right."

The officer's brows knitted savagely. "It begins to look as if this might be some of our business. What happened? Indians?"

"Yes."

"How far away?"

"I don't know. They caught us in a canyon somewhere out yonder, maybe three or four days ago; there was a lot killed, some of them soldiers. My dad was shot, and then that night he—he got me out up the rocks, and he—he was carrying me in his arms when I—I fainted. I saw there was blood on his shirt, and it was dripping down on the grass as he walked. That's about all I know."

"Who is the man? What's his name?"

The girl looked squarely into the lieutenant's eyes, and, for some reason which she could never clearly explain even to herself, lied calmly. "I don't know; I never asked."

Sergeant Carson rose stiffly from his knees beside the extended figure and strode heavily across toward where they were sitting, lifting his hand in soldierly salute, his heels clicking as he brought them sharply together in military precision.

"The fellow is getting his eyes open, sir," he reported, "and is breathing more regular. Purty weak yit, but he'll come round in time." He stared curiously down at the girl now sitting up unsupported, while a sudden look of surprised recognition swept across his face.

"Great guns!" he exclaimed, eagerly, "but I know you. You're old man Gillis' gal from Bethune, ain't ye?"

"Yes," she acknowledged simply, "but he's dead."

"Never mind, little girl," the lieutenant said, with boyish sympathy. "I knew Gillis, and, now the sergeant has spoken, I remember you quite well. Thought all the time your face was familiar, but couldn't quite decide where I had seen you before. So poor old Gillis has gone, and you are left all alone in the world! Well, he was an old soldier, could not have hoped to live much longer anyway, and would rather go fighting at the end. We'll take you back with us to Bethune, and the ladies of the garrison will look after you."

The recumbent figure lying a few yards away half lifted itself upon one elbow, and Hampton's face, white and haggard, stared uncertainly across the open space. For an instant his gaze dwelt upon the crossed sabers shielding the gilded "7" on the front of the lieutenant's scouting hat, then settled upon the face of the girl. With one hand pressed against the grass he pushed himself slowly up until he sat fronting them, his teeth clinched tight, his gray eyes gleaming feverishly in their sunken sockets.

"I'll be damned if you will!" he said, hoarsely. "She's my girl now."

CHAPTER V.
A New Proposition.

To one in the least inclined toward fastidiousness, the Miners' Home at Glencaid would scarcely appeal as a desirable place for long-continued residence. But such a one would have had small choice in the matter, as it chanced to be the only hotel there. The Miners' Home was unquestionably unique as regards architectural details, having been constructed by sections, in accordance with the rapid development of the camp, and enjoyed the further distinction—there being only two others equally stylish in town—of being built of sawn plank, although, greatly to the regret of its unfortunate occupants, lack of seasoning had resulted in wide cracks in both walls and stairway, while strict privacy within the chambers was long ago a mere reminiscence. Without the Miners' Home put up a good front, —and was in reality the most pretentious structure gracing the single cluttered street of Glencaid. Directly across the street, its front a perfect blaze of glass, stood invitingly the Occidental saloon, but the Widow Guffy, who operated the Miners' Home with a strong hand, possessed an antipathy to strong liquor, which successfully kept all suspicion of intoxicating drink absent from those sacredly guarded precincts, except as her transient guests imported it internally.

Mr. Hampton during the course of his somewhat erratic career had previously passed several eventful weeks in Glencaid. He was neither unknown nor unappreciated at the Miners' Home, and having on previous occasions established his reputation as a spender, experienced little difficulty now in procuring promptly the very best accommodation which the house afforded. That this arrangement was accomplished somewhat to the present discomfort of two vociferous eastern tourists did not greatly interfere with his pleasurable interest in the situation.

"Send those two fellows in here to argue it out," he said, languidly, after listening disgustedly to their loud lamentations in the hallway, and addressing his remarks to Mrs. Guffy, who had glanced into the room to be again assured regarding his comfort, and to express her deep regret over the unseemly racket. "The girl has fallen asleep, and I'm getting tired of hearing so much noise."

"No, be hivings, an' ye don't do nuthin' of thet sort, Bob," returned the widow, good-naturedly, busying herself with a dust-rag. "This is me own house, an' Oi've tended ter the loikes of them sort er fellers afore. There'll be no more bother this toime. Besoides,' it's a paceful house Oi'm runnin', an' Oi know ye'r way of sittling them things. It's too strenurous ye are, Misther Hampton. And what did ye do wid the young lady, Oi make bould to ask?"

Hampton carelessly waved his hand toward the rear room, the door of which stood ajar, and blew a thick cloud of smoke into the air, his eyes continuing to gaze dreamily through the open window toward the distant hills.

"Who's running the game over at the Occidental?" he asked, professionally.

"Red Slavin, bad cess to him!" and her eyes regarded her questioner with renewed anxiety. "But sure now, Bob, ye mustn't think of playin' yit awhoile. Yer narves are in no fit shape, an' won't be fer a wake yit."

He made no direct reply, and she hung about, flapping the dust-rag uneasily.

"An' what did ye mane ter be doin' wid the young gyurl?" she questioned at last, in wom[illegible]ly curiosity.

Hampton w[illegible]led about on the hard chair, and [illegible]garded her quizzingly. "Mrs. [illegible]," he said, slowly, "you've been a mother to me, and it would certainly be unkind not to give you a straight tip. Do? Why, take care of her, of course. What else would you expect of one possessing my kindly disposition and well-known motives of philanthropy? Can it be that I have resided with you, off and on, for ten years past without your ever realizing the fond yearnings of my heart? Mrs. Guffy, I shall make her the heiress to my millions; I shall marry her off to some eastern nabob, and thus attain to that high position in society I am so well fitted to adorn —sure, and what else were you expecting, Mrs. Guffy?"

"A lolkely story," with a sniff of disbelief. "They tell me she's old Gillis' daughter over to Bethune."

"They tell you, do they?" a sudden gleam of anger darkening his gray eyes. "Who tell you?"

"Sure, Bob, an' thet's nuthin' ter git mad about, so fur as I kin see. The story is in iverybody's mouth. It wus thim sojers what brought ye in thet tould most ov it, but the lieutenant,—Brant of the Seventh cavalry, no less, —who took dinner here afore he wint back after the dead bodies, give me her name."

"Brant of the Seventh?" He faced her fairly now, his face again haggard and gray, all the slight gleam of fun gone out of it. "Was that the lad's name?"

"Sure, and didn't ye know him?"

"No; I noticed the '7' on his hat, of course, but never asked any questions, for his face was strange. I didn't know. The name, when you just spoke it, struck me rather queer. I—I used to know a Brant in the Seventh, but he was much older; it was not this man."

She answered something, lingering for a moment at the door, but he made no response, and she passed out silently, leaving him staring moodily through the open window, his eyes appearing glazed and sightless.

An hour later he was still sitting on the hard chair by the window, a cigar between his teeth, thinking. The lowering sun was pouring a perfect flood of gold across the rag carpet, but he remained utterly unconscious as to aught save the gloomy trend of his own awakened memories. Some one rapped upon the outer door.

"Come in," he exclaimed, carelessly, and barely glancing up. "Well, what is it this time, Mrs. Guffy?"

The landlady had never before seen this usually happy guest in his present mood, and she watched him curiously.

"A man wants ter see ye," she announced, shortly, her hand on the knob.

"Oh, I'm in no shape for play tonight; go back and tell him so."

"Sure, an' it's aisy 'nough ter see thet wid half an eye. But this un isn't thet koind of a man, an' he's so moighty perlite about it. Oi jist cudn't sind the loikes of him away. It's 'Missus Guffy, me dear madam, wud ye be koind enough to convey me compliments to Misther Robert Hampton, and requist him to grant me a few minutes of his toime on an important matter?' Sure, an' what do ye think of thet?"

"Huh! one of those fellows who had these rooms?" and Hampton rose to his feet with animation.

The landlady lowered her voice to an almost inaudible whisper.

"It's the Rev. Howard Wynkoop," she announced, impressively, dwelling upon the name. "The Rev. Howard Wynkoop, the Prasbytarian missionary —wouldn't thet cork ye?"

It evidently did, for Mr. Hampton stared at her for fully a minute in an amazement too profound for fit expression in words. Then he swallowed something in his throat.

"Show the gentleman up," he said, shortly, and sat down to wait.

The Rev. Howard Wynkoop was neither giant nor dwarf, but the very fortunate possessor of a countenance which at once awakened confidence in his character. He entered the room quietly, rather dreading this interview with one of Mr. Hampton's well-known proclivities, yet in this case feeling abundantly fortified in the righteousness of his cause. His brown eyes met the inquisitive gray ones frankly, and Hampton waved him silently toward a vacant chair.

"Our lines of labor in this vineyard being so entirely opposite," the latter said, coldly, but with intended politeness, "the honor of your unexpected call quite overwhelms me. I shall have to trouble you to speak somewhat softly in explanation of your present mission, so as not to disturb a young girl who chances to be sleeping in the room beyond."

"It was principally upon her account I ventured to call," Wynkoop explained in sudden confidence. "Might I see her?"

Hampton's watchful eyes swept the other's face suspiciously, and his hands clinched.

"Relative?" he asked gravely.

The preacher shook his head.

"Friend of the family, perhaps?"

"No, Mr. Hampton. My purpose in coming here is perfectly proper, yet the request was not advanced as a right, but merely as a special privilege."

A moment Hampton hesitated; then he arose and quietly crossed the room, holding open the door. Without a word being spoken the minister followed, and stood beside him. For several minutes the eyes of both men rested upon the girl's sleeping form and upturned face. Then Wynkoop drew silently back, and Hampton closed the door noiselessly.

"I Have Shot Men for Less. Go, Before I Forget Your Cloth."

"Well," he said, inquiringly, "what does all this mean?"

"Let us sit down again," said the minister, "and I will try to make my purpose sufficiently clear. I am not here to mince words, nor do I believe you to be the kind of a man who would respect me if I did. I may say something that will not sound pleasant, but in the cause of my Master I cannot hesitate. You are an older man than I, Mr. Hampton; your experience in life has doubtless been much broader than mine, and it may even be that in point of education you are likewise my superior. Nevertheless, as the only minister of the gospel residing in this community it is beyond question my plain duty to speak a few words to you in behalf of this young lady, and her probable future. I trust not to be offensive, yet cannot shirk the requirements of my sacred office."

The speaker paused, somewhat disconcerted perhaps by the hardening of the lines in Hampton's face.

"Go on," commanded Hampton, tersely, "only let the preacher part slide, and say just what you have to say as man to man."

"I prefer to do so," he continued. "It will render my unpleasant task much easier, and yield us both a more direct road to travel. I have been laboring on this field for nearly three years. When I first came here you were pointed out to me as a most dangerous man, and ever since then I have constantly been regaled by the stories of your exploits. I have known you merely through such unfriendly reports, and came here strongly prejudiced against you as a representative of every evil I war against. We have never met before, because there seemed to be nothing in common between us; because I had been led to suppose you to be an entirely different man from what I now believe you are."

Hampton stirred uneasily in his chair.

"Shall I paint in exceedingly plain words the picture given me of you?"

There was no response, but the speaker moistened his lips and proceeded firmly. "It was that of a professional gambler, utterly devoid of mercy toward his victims; a reckless fighter, who shot to kill upon the least provocation; a man without moral character, and from whom any good action was impossible. That was what was said about you. Is the tale true?"

Hampton laughed unpleasantly, his eyes grown hard and ugly.

"I presume it must be," he admitted, with a quick side glance toward the closed door, "for the girl out yonder thought about the same. A most excellent reputation to establish with only ten years of strict attendance to business."

Wynkoop's grave face expressed his disapproval.

"Well, in my present judgment that report was not altogether true," he went on clearly and with greater confidence. "I did suppose you exactly that sort of a man when I first came into this room. I have not believed so, however, for a single moment since. Nevertheless, the naked truth is certainly bad enough, without any necessity for our resorting to romance. You may deceive others by an assumption of recklessness, but I feel convinced your true nature is not evil. It has been warped through some cause which is none of my business. Let us deal alone with facts. You are a gambler, a professional gambler, with all that that implies; your life is, of necessity, passed among the most vicious and degrading elements of mining camps, and you do not hesitate even to take human life when in your judgment it seems necessary to preserve your own. Under this veneer of lawlessness you may, indeed, possess a warm heart, Mr. Hampton; you may be a good fellow, but you are certainly not a model character, even according to the liberal code of the border."

"Extremely kind of you to enter my rooms uninvited, and furnish me with this list of moral deficiencies," r

LABOR DAY GAMES ON LOCAL DIAMONDS

Y. M. C. A. DEFEATS PLAINS BY SCORE OF 5 TO 2.

The Y. M. C. A. team defeated Scotch Plains at the latter place, yesterday afternoon, by the score of 5 to 2, in one of the best played games of the season. George Dupee held the Plains aggregation down to three hits, while the association boys gathered in five singles off of Gus. Frentz. The contest was marked by sharp fielding and all-round clean play. The umpiring was exceptionally good.

The association nine did not fare so well on Saturday, when it met the Laurels, of Bound Brook, at Crescent Oval. The visitors gave the locals a coat of whitewash, the score being 2 to 0. Harney's pitching was the great obstacle to the home team.

The Lincoln A. C. defeated the West Ends, of Plainfield, at Lincoln, yesterday, by a score of 3 to 0.

The Dunellan Field Club defeated the Riverside A. C., of Rahway, Saturday afternoon at Dunellen, by a score of 10 to 8. Russell pitched great ball up to the last half of the seventh inning. He allowed but two hits. He then weakened and Rahway nearly tied the score. The score by innings:

Batteries—Russell and Loizeaux, Moulton and VanZandt.

Heavy and consecutive hitting put the Clinton Avenues ahead of the Bound Brooks yesterday afternoon, and kept them there. The Buds did some clouting themselves, but they couldn't pump the safeties with the timeliness necessary to overtake the West Enders. Score 9 to 6.

Randolph was at the shore for the holiday, and Jim Emery shifted from third to the mound. He wasn't the worst man that operated there. Moynihan was driven from the box in the fifth, and Harney, who is supposed to be the fastest thing in the flinging line in Bound Brook, couldn't stop the pennant winners. The Buds drooped sorely, and mishandled the ball at bad times.

Score by innings:

Heavy hitting won for the Clinton Avenues in their game against the swift High Bridge team at Califon Saturday afternoon. The score was 13 to 9.

HIS COURTSHIP ROMANTIC

Jonas Lie, Artist, Wooed His Bride-elect Among Norway's Mountains.

COMES HERE TO WED

Promise She Gave When With Touring Party in Own Country to Be Fulfilled in Plainfield This Month.

The announcement of the approaching wedding of Jonas Lie, the well-known landscape artist, of this city, and Miss Charlotte Nissen, in yesterday's Daily Press, is the culmination of a pretty romance which had its beginning in the Norwegian mountains during the summer of 1906. It is of especial interest because it will unite two Norwegian families, which have attained eminence for their artistic talent.

Miss Nissen, who had been visiting her cousin, Dr. H. Nissen, of Minneapolis, since last February, is now spending a few days in Chicago, prior to coming to Plainfield for her wedding. She is expected here the latter part of the week.

The romance, which will bring one of this already-scattered family to America, began in the summer of 1906 in the Norwegian mountains, where the couple were two of a party, which spent fourteen days traveling on foot about the mountains. Amid such romantic surroundings and possessed with a nature susceptible to such beauty, it is not to be wondered at that the young woman and the painter fell in love with each other. After the marriage, which will be an extremely quiet one, the couple will make their home in this city. A year hence they may take a trip to their native land to visit the scenes of their childhood, but they will return to this city afterward.

Dr. Oscar Nissen, father of the bride, is one of the best known physicians in Christiana and Miss Nissen's mother, Mrs. Erika Nissen, was a celebrated pianist, considered the best in Norway and famed throughout Europe. She died two years ago. Miss Nissen's brother, Karl Nissen, has already reached fame. This year he played in London before Queen Alexandria. The other two brothers are engineers, and it is the bride's hope that her brother, Oscar, will stop in New York on his way to South America this fall to be present at her wedding. Stranger as it may seem, her sister, Erika Lie, is the wife of a second cousin of Mr. Lie and they are now in Paris.

It is the fond hope of the couple to return for a time to the mountains of Norway, where Mr. Lie can transfer the wonder of that northern scenery on the canvass. And the midnight sun.

In her delicately broken English, the Norwegian girl often tries to tell of the beauty of that sun, which she has seen several times. After many efforts, just as everyone else must, she had finally to be silen and let shining eyes tell how it had moved her. "And I can't tell him so that he can paint it," she says. "He must see it." Miss Nissen is famed for her natural beauty and many accomplishments.

Mr. Lie is probably one of the best known among the younger artists of this country. His uncle is one of the best of Norwegian authors and from point of number of readers ranks ahead of Isben and Bjornsen. Mr. Lie left his native land at the age of thirteen years, going to Paris. He remained there but a short time, when he came to this country. Speaking the Norwegian language fluently, he determined to learn the English language so that he could speak it without accent. To do this he dropped his native tongue completely, until he mastered the other language. Later he picked it up again under considerable difficulty and now speaks both equally well.

He has traveled into all parts of the world and his work has gained recognition in many of the most famous galleries. He constantly receives more invitations to hang his pictures in galleries than he is able to accept. During the past summer he has camped out on the mountains back of North Plainfield, where he has busied himself with his work in preparation for the fall and winter exhibitions.

The exact date for the wedding will not be fixed until Miss Nissen reaches Plainfield, but the affair will be so simple that but few details will be necessary to arrange for the event. Both Miss Nissen and Mr. Lie are adverse to n otoriety and display and when they became engaged it was at once decided that the wedding should be as void of pomp as possible.

CITY NATIONAL GETS $10,000 BOND ISSUE

ITS BID FOR LOT AT PAR ACCEPTED LAST NIGHT.

The Council at its regular September meeting, last night, authorized the issuance of ten $1,000 5 per cent street improvement bonds for macadam work. After Mr. Tolles, chairman of the finance committee, presented a form of bond proposed, he offered a resolution, which was adopted, authorizing the issue. The City National Bank offered to take the entire issue at par with accrued interest. The offer was accepted in accordance with a resolution by Mr. Tolles. These bonds are to run for three years from date and the city reserves the right to redeem one or more any time within that period upon giving the required legal notice to the bank.

In connection with the proposed issue of bonds, Mr. Tolles offered a resolution authorizing the city treasurer to have prepared a number of blank bonds and $50 was appropriated for that purpose.

Regarding the offer of the City National Bank to take the $10,000 bond issue, Mr. Buxton wanted to know whether the matter had been before the finance committee for consideration. Mr. Tolles said that the action was taken upon the advice of Mayor Fisk, and besides he said that the city has the right to award an issue of bonds in this way without advertising for bids. President Daniel added that the provisions under which the bonds were issued precluded their being sold at a premium.

CHIEF KIELY'S WARNING TO LOCAL HOUSEHOLDERS.

Advises Residents to Guard Against Sneak Thieves in Guise of Corporation Employees.

Chief of Police Kiely issued a warning today against fake telephone men, census takers and meter inspectors. Sneakthieves working under the guise of corporation employees and census men are acting in surrounding cities at this time, and the Chief advises householders to be on their guard.

The thieves represent themselves in plausible guise, and having gained admission to the house they seize the first opportunity to steal. Sometimes, in the residences of the rich, they act as scouts, seeking information as to the lay of the rooms and exits. In all cases, where men representing themselves to be workmen or inspectors not personally known by some one in the house, sight of their badge or credentials should be demanded be fore they are permitted to enter.

DANIELS ACTS AS MAYOR

Councilman Signs Pay Vouchers at Common Council's Meeting.

CITY FATHERS' ROUTINE

Some Reports and Petitions Filed—Minor Matters Take Up Much Time.

Owing to the failure of the arrangements made for approving the claims against the city in the absence of Mayor Charles J. Fisk, the Common Council found it necessary to take an hour's recess at the September meeting last night to give President Daniel, acting Mayor, an opportunity to sign the bills. It was first decided to adjourn the meeting until tonight for this purpose, but as a number of the members could not be present it was afterward agreed to hold the recess, thus preventing any hold-up in the payment of claims.

Felix Chargois and Frank Ingraham tendered their resigations as call-men and the same were accepted on motion of Chairman Hibbard, of the fire committee. Their places were not filled last night.

A petition to open up and grade a street between Leland avenue and Terrill road was received from Edward Ellis and others, the petitioners agreeing to dedicate land for the purpose. The matter was referred, as was also a petition from Jacob Sachar, the new owner of Bennett Britton's property on Clinton avenue, who asked the city to provide pipe for carrying water through an open ditch in this property, it being his intention to improve the land.

The petition from Charles H. Hand asking that a building line fourteen feet six inches from the curb be established on Watchung avenue, between North avenue and East Third street, was referred to the street and sewer committee, as was also one from Theodore F. French, requesting that the building line on Somerset street, between Green brook and Front street be established 29½ feet from the curb line on either side.

E. F. Feickert, of Belvidere avenue, asked the Common Council to remove a sewer assessment against him for the property at 1101 Park terrace on the ground that the property is owned by E. S. Sharp. The matter was referred to the finance committee.

Street Commissioner Gavett reported that thirty sewer permits were granted last month and Building Inspector Doane reported the granting of twenty-six permits. Clerk H. G. Adams, of the district court, reported receipts for the past month of $85.22, expenditures of $34.22, leaving a balance of $54.

On a motion offered by Mr. Gloak all of the checks of bidders on the Plainfield avenue storm sewer contract, except the one of C. M. Meeker, who submitted the lowest figures, were returned, Mr. Meeker's was withheld for the reason that the Common Council may decide to undertake the work. In that case he would get the c ontract.

The petition of W. W. Mills for permission to use hollow cement blocks in the construction of a building on Madison avenue was granted on motion of Mr. Hibbard.

Several resolutions offered by Mr. Tolles, chairman of the finance committee, were adopted. Two provided for the borrowing of $10,000 for sewer improvement work; another for borrowing $5,000 with which to start the brick pavement work, and another provided for the borrowing of $20,000 for the fire department and $4,000 for the poor fund in anticipation of the collection of taxes.

GEORGE P. DUPEE DEAD

Prominent Resident of North Plainfield Succumbs to Bright's Disease.

PHILANTHROPIC CITIZEN

Vestryman of Holy Cross—Member of Anchor Lodge, F. and A. M.—Funeral On Saturday.

George P. Dupee, for over thirty years a leading citizen of North Plainfield, died at his home on Rockview avenue at 4 o'clock this morning, following a long illness with heart trouble and Bright's disease. Although Mr. Dupee had been in poor health for over a year, he was able to be around until five weeks ago. The last time he went out was on a Saturday afternoon five weeks ago, when he witnessed the baseball game at Crescent Oval in which his son, George H. Dupee, pitched for Y. M. C. A. He was extremely fond of the National game and was a regular attendant at local contests.

Mr. Dupee was born in Boston, Mass., sixty-one years ago last month and he resided there for twenty-three years. When a young man he engaged in the manufacture of hats. For several years he was one of the leading men in this business in Boston. Afterward he moved to New York, where he formed a partnership with C. H. Tenney under the firm name of Tenney & Dupee, the place of business being on West Fourth street. Mr. Dupee took charge of the straw hat department, while Mr. Tenney looked after felts. Owing to failing health Mr. Dupee retired about seven years ago. The firm was rated as one of the largest in the wholesale line in the East.

Especially in church affairs was Mr. Dupee active. For over twenty years he was the senior warden of the Church of the Holy Cross and through all its many changes he stood faithfully by the parish, it being his one idea to see it prosper at any cost. He was exceedingly charitable and no worthy cause ever failed to receive from his open hand. He contributed liberally to every department of his church.

As one of the founders of the Park Club, the exclusive social organization of the borough, he was always its chief supporter. He was elected treasurer at the organization and held the office until a few years ago. He was also a member of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M.

Mr. Dupee is survived by a wife and two sons, George H. Dupee, who lives at home, and Charles Dupee, who is engaged in insurance business in San Francisco. He has been summoned home by telegraph.

The funeral service will be held Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

BIRTHS EXCEED DEATHS IN CITY LAST MONTH

REPORT SHOWS PLAINFIELD REMARKABLY FREE FROM DISEASE.

Reports showing the excellent sanitary condition in the city, were read at the September meeting of the Board of Health yesterday afternoon The city has continued to be remarkably free from communicable disease. During August there were but two cases of scarlet fever, one each of diphtheria, chicken-pox and typhoid fever.

During the month forty-seven dairies were inspected and seven bottling places and creameries. Samples of all the milk sold in Plainfield were analyzed. The general average of the milk is improving, especially in regard to the bachteria. The milk from one dairy was found to be badly watered. The dairyman was warned, but his milk has not been sold in Plainfield since.

There were reported during August eleven marriages, forty-four births, one still-birth and forty-one deaths. Permits were granted to John Anderson to collect garbage and to William J. Dealaman, Frederick Widmaier and Miss E. M. LaRue to sell milk.

To Clean the State House.

After a thorough investigation made as to the merits of the two systems, the Dunn-Locke Vacuum Cleaning Company, of New York, and of which a number of Plainfield people are stockholders, has been awarded the contract for cleaning the State Capitol building at Trenton. Its only competitor for the job, the Vacuum Cleaner Company, made a bid $500 lower than the successful bidder but the commission decided that the scrubbing process and general efficiency of the Dunn-Locke concern was superior and for that reason decided to expend an extra $500 for the work.

DANIEL FORCE IS FIRED

Convicting of Insubordination, City Fathers Dismiss Fireman.

AT TRIAL LAST NIGHT

Chief Doane Acts As Complainant and City Clerk MacMurray Is Made Defendant—Marsh As Prosecutor.

Daniel Force, formerly a call-man in the fire department and against whom charges were preferred by Chief T. O. Doane, after his failure to either resign or perform duty, did not appear or make any defense at the time appointed for the trial at the September meeting of the Common Council, last night. Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh appeared for the city and followed the usual procedure of law in proving the charges, just as though the defendant was present. Afterward a resolution drafted by Mr. Marsh, was offered by Mr. Hibbard, chairman of the fire committee, dismissing Mr. Force from the department. It was adopted.

The case was a unique one. Mr. Force was appointed a call-man on April 28, 1902, but since January 1, 1907, had failed to perform any duty. Although he declared to Captain George Feiring on one occasion, as brought out in the latter's testimony, that he was through and surrendered his badge and keys, he refused to resign. Furthermore, he declined to take any notice of letters and communication sent to him by Chief Doane, Corporation Counsel Marsh or Chairman Hibbard, of the fire committee. And when requested to call on these officials for conference he ignored the invitations as though they had never been sent.

The regular order of business was suspended when the Common Council met to hold the trial. Mr. Marsh asked if the defendant was present and learning that he was not, proceeded. He stated the case briefly, declaring that it would be necessary to prove the charges as though a defense was made.

The first witness called after City Clerk J. T. MacMurray took the necessary oath of office acting as the defendant, was Chief Doane, and by his testimony it was shown that he had served a copy of charges against Mr. Force on him in person. The charges were for neglect of duty and misconduct in office. Chief Doane testified that since January 1, 1907, Mr. Force had not reported for duty at any of the numerous fires. He was not given leave of absence nor excused from duty.

Captain George Feiring, of No. 1 Engine Company, testified that Mr. Force in his presence early in 1907 surrendered his badge and keys and declared that he was through and that he had failed to report for duty since that time. Warren H. Marsh, clerk in the office of the corporation counsel, produced the letter written by him for the latter to Mr. Force, calling his attention to his dereliction and informing him that if the charges were proved he would be expelled from the department.

These were all the witnesses called, and Mr. Marsh then declared that the evidence produced showed that Mr. Force was guilty of violating section sixty-four of the rules and regulations of the fire department, by failing to respond to duty or to resign; that between January 1 and May 28 of this year he did not report for duty, and that by surrendering his badge and keys and yet refusing to resign he was guilty of misconduct. He further declared that Mr. Force's acttion was extremely embarrassing to the city as his office was not vacant. He then informed the members that they could expell Mr. Force from the department. With that end in view Mr. Marsh submitted a resolution, which was offered by Mr. Hibbard. This provided for the expulsion of Mr. Force. The vote was unanimous in favor of the adoption of the resolution. No explanation for Mr. Force's actions were offered and the members seemed much puzzled to know why he had adopted such a course.

MR. IREMONGER QUITS CHAIRMANSHIP IN DISGUST

New Idea Leader Resigns as Head of City Committee After His Faction Snubbed Him.

FLETCHER TOO IS SORE

Too Much Bossism In New Idea Ranks Said to Be the Real Cause—City Convention On October 10.

Dissention has broken out in the ranks of the New Idea people in Plainfield, the internal strife becoming apparent when Edward E. Iremonger last night resigned as chairman of the regular Republican city committee. Mr. Iremonger, last fall one of the most conspicuous leaders of the Colbyites' movement, has quit because of ill health, as he stated in his letter of resignation, but behind it all is something far more important. There was only a handful of members of the committee present last night when he resigned and none would talk today, but a Daily Press representative has learned the true cause of the unexpected move.

Bossism within the ranks of the faction which decries that practise is the true cause for M. Iremonger stepping down and out. A year ago he was chosen a member of the committee, winning his seat as a New Idea member. That faction boomed him for chairman and the regulars fell in line with the sentiment, although they formed a majority of the body. It soon developed that the new chairman was not altogether in sympathy with some of the "new ideas" and since that time it is said that he has not been so much in favor with the Colbyites.

When it came time this year to name members for the committee, Mr. Iremonger was slighted in the slate fixed by the New Idea nomination committee and his name was omitted from the list from the Second ward, where Howard Tracy and R. Henry Depew are the Colbyite leaders. The anti-organization leaders gave as an excuse that they did not know his address although the secretary of the regular committee and others had it. So Mr. Iremonger was not put on the slate to succeed himself and therein lies the tale of dissension. Realizing that he had been slighted, the Second ward man quit last night before his term expired. It is not supposed that Mr. Tracy will be his successor although Vice Chairman Andrew McCardell, a regular, says it will be up to the New Idea fighters to name the man. He won't take himself and adds that he doesn't see why the regulars would conduct the campaign this fall when the Colbyites seem so anxious to do so.

G. B. Fletcher, a member of the committee from the Third ward, was also left off the New Idea slate for renomination. He's through with the game too and is willing to let the alleged New Idea bosses run the campaign as they see fit. Together with Iremonger he is not altogether pleased with his turn-down and it is said that there is trouble brewing in the Colbyites ranks.

The City Committee last night fixed the date for the city convention It will be held on Thursday night, October 10.

THOUGHT $25 PER DAY TOO MUCH FOR OUTING

SO COMMON COUNCIL GAVE CHIEF DOANE $18 PER DAY.

When Chairman Hibbard, of the finance committee, proposed at the September meeting of the Common Council, last night, to give Chief T. O. Doane $100 with which to attend the annual meeting of the International Association of Fire Chiefs at Washington, October 8, 9, 10 and 11, there was considerable opposition to the amount named.

In the opinion of President Daniel, $25 a day was a too generous allowance, and Mr. Mellick concurred in that view. Mr. Daniel was puzzled to know how Chief Doane could spend the sum requested for such a trip. It was explained by Mr. Hibbard that it had been customary to allow Chief Doane $150 for these trips west of the Mississippi River, and $100 for trips east of it and it did not seem to him to be excessive.

The resolution was amended by Mr. Mellick, $75 being substituted for $100. Mr. Buxton and Mr. Hibbard voted against the amendment, but there being seven votes in favor, the amended resolution was passed by a unanimous vote.

MINISTERS MAY OPPOSE ASSEMBLYMAN PERKINS

MOVEMENT ON FOOT TO FIGHT AGAINST HIS RENOMINATION.

It is reported that there is a movement on foot among certain local ministers to have their congregations take a stand against the renomination of Randolph Perkins to the Assembly for a fourth term, the objection to him being his attitude in the local option fight in the Legislature last winter. The Westfielder's actions at that time displeased the church-goers who espouse the Anti-Saloon League's bills for self-government in excise matters and they are ardent, it is reprirted, in their opposition to his ambition to again represent Union county.

Rev. A. C. McCrea, pastor of the First M. E. church, has interested his fellow ministers in the fight against Perkins. Today he stated that nothing definite had been done although he had personally consulted with all the dominies who have returned from their vacations. It is not unlikely that some of the preachers will call the attention of their people to the part Mr. Perkins played in the dispute which resulted in J. Frank Burke, the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, being denied privileges in the Legislature.

NEWSPAPERMAN GETS A BRIDE IN ILLINOIS.

The groom has been a resident of Oak Tree for some time and is highly esteemed among the residents there.

Back From Adirondacks.

Taylor Mehaffey, who has been playing on the Hotel Ampersand nine at Ampersand in the Adirondacks, returned home this morning. The nine wound up its season Monday. It rained too hard to play. The team was a winner all through the season, and Mehaffey had a big share in its glory. He will probably finish the season in Scotch Plains, where he started, at third.

LIBRARY'S DIRECTORS COMPLIMENT MISS ADAMS.

Pass Resolution of Appreciation of Retiring Librarian's Services.

Engrossed resolutions of appreciation of services have been prepared by the Board of Directors of the Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room, for presentation to Miss Emma Adams, the retiring librarian, and at the September meeting of the board, last night, action was taken, each member signing the resolutions. They attest the high esteem of the board of the long and faithful service of Miss Adams and regret her departure from the work.

The special committee on preparing and printing the library report was received. It was stated that 750 of the 1,000 copies had been sent out and others would follow. The librarian's report for August was read and placed on file.

Miss Adams has severed her connection as librarian after a service of nearly twenty years to take up social work. This fall she will enter a New York college to prepare herself for the work.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

Mr. Perkins at Plainfield.

The formal opening of the campaign of Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, at Plainfield, for a renomination at the hands of the Republican county convention delegates, who will gather in this city on September 12, was the flattest kind of a failure. The scores and scores of empty chairs which greeted the Assemblyman, the character of the audience, and its lack of responsiveness to his "sensations" must have been a stinging blow to a man of Perkins' intelligence and natural pride. "A lively meeting with a crowded house is expected," said Wednesday evening's issue of the personal organ of the Assemblyman, the Plainfield Courier-News. Interest in the great fight, it was pointed out, has spread all over the city and borough. The slim meeting and the notable lack of enthusiasm showed that Plainfield, where all the "holler" has come from concerning the "great wrong" done Mr. Perkins, had decided to call the bluff.

That few if any over 100 persons gathered in Reform Hall Thursday evening, after it had been announced that Assemblyman Perkins had great cards up his sleeve, big disclosures to make, and an all-around smart campaign speech to deliver, was all the more remarkable. And it was evident that the small crowd present at this well-advertised public meeting cut the Assemblyman deeply. He referred with forced facetiousness to the absolutely deserted galleries, and the tenor of his speech showed that he realized perfectly well that he is playing a losing game and that his campaign is not popular with the people of Union county. He as much as admitted that he was beaten. Certainly the campaign of the Westfield Assemblyman has opened most inauspiciously; and almost anyone will agree that the treatment he received in Plainfield last evening was worse than he deserved.

Posing as a reformer, Mr. Perkins does not make a good impression. His speech last evening would have repulsed the average careful citizen, who believes that great moral questions should be treated with due seriousness, and that flippancy and irreverence are intolerable on the part of a public servant who comes before the people to give an account of himself. Mr. Perkins seemed to be laboring under great anxiety lest he should be considered a "goody-good." And in order to make him that kind of a good fellow, he made a number of cheap, unwise and totally uncalled for remarks about his personal attitude toward drink, which seemed to please some of the fellows in the back of the hall.

Such remarks in view of the opposition to the Assemblyman by the local option people and the so-called "church people" looked like an undiplomatic waving of the red flag. Mr. Perkins also joked about an appreciation of his cleanness as a legislator which had been made by a fellow Assemblyman, but which he said was a little overdrawn. The assemblyman remarked that he did not pretend to be at Trenton what he had been described to be. Such talk, of course, with unthinking people, may be mistaken for independence and broadness. With others, especially at this time, it will furnish evidence of a lack of moral balance and absence of appreciation of a fine sense of discrimination both in action and public utterance.

Mr. Perkins made it clear that he was a Republican first, last and all the time, and that he would not be anything else. He lauded the party and spoke with apparent pride of his persistent fight against the "new idea" folks. He had not let up on them from the start to the finish, and seemed especially anxious to have it understood that he was not one of them now. If defeated he said he should still be a Republican. His interests, he pointed out, were wholly with that party. This was an important announcement, of course, in view of the Plainfield Perkins organ that Senator Colby will stump Union county for Perkins.

Those who attended the meeting expecting to be treated to a sensation were disappointed. The assemblyman alleged that his vote against Dryden had been the cause of his political downfall, but the awful Kean-Dryden plot, which, when disclosed, "will break up the political autocracy in this county," was not uncovered. Mr. Perkins blamed Tillman for selling him out. He accused the county Republican chairman of undue activity in behalf of anti-Perkins delegates. But the plot, the deep-laid political scheme, which would show up the "corruption" in Union county politics, were not disclosed. After Mr. Perkins' opening speech of the campaign, the county still remains the cleanest in the State; and it is beyond the power of the Westfield assemblyman or anybody else to show that political affairs in this section of New Jersey are not free from offensive bossism and wrong doing.—Elizabeth Journal.

Katzenbach of Trenton.

The rumor that Katzenbach of Trenton is the choice of the Democratic organization in New Jersey for Governor is most persistent. A Democratic Governor of New Jersey would be a logical candidate for Vice-President if the national convention were to nominate a Western or Southern man for President; so-leaders like Davis, Gourley, Cornish and Hudspeth, who, it may be supposed, will control the State Convention that meets in New Jersey on September ... would be wise to balance the ... of all available candidates for ... sident with that of Katzenbach ... note how the combination sounds.

Of the Democratic candidates for Governor in New Jersey who have taken or been put into the field the Hon. Frank S. Katzenbach, Jr., is the most silent and circumspect, although as Mayor of Trenton he made 327 speeches of welcome to visiting societies and organizations. Farmer Martine of Plainfield is constitutionally opposed to keeping still, State Senator Samuel S. Childs has boldly announced the platform he would like to stand upon, and Brewer Hinchliffe of Paterson, the fire and flood mayor, has only casual fits of eloquent silence. Since the propulsion of his boom into the open by disinterested friends Mr. Katzenbach, who can talk like a polished Princetonian on occasion, has been mysteriously reticent.

The impression obtaining in northern New Jersey, where Mr. Katzenbach is not well known, that he is a florid, well fed, good humored, somnolent, solid and stolid nonentity picked out by the politicians to run against the Bishop's bill, does an accomplished gentlemen more than a mild injustice. Mr. Katzenbach is a young man of fine presence, a graduate of Princeton, where he was president of the lawn tennis association and a renowned debater, and he has served two terms as Mayor of Trenton. A very capable and dignified Mayor he made. His vetoes were plentiful and well aimed at a Republican Common Council that was a law unto itself.

Mayor Katzenbach stood for limited franchises and the economy in public affairs which consists "in not spending money." At the same time he was a loyal organization man. His appointments were very creditable to an organization man. In a word, he was an old-fashioned Democrat of the Cleveland school. Locally he is popular. When Franklin Murphy, the Republican candidate for Governor in 1901, carried Trenton by more than 1,000 plurality, Katzenbach, running for Mayor, beat his Republican opponent, now Senator Frank O. Briggs, by 238 votes. Two years later the grandson of old Peter Katzenbach, who emigrated to this country some seventy years ago, was re-elected by a plurality of 500. Mr. Katzenbach was chosen Mayor the first time on his birthday; and he will be 40 on November 5, which happens to be election day. He is said to be something of a fatalist. The proper way to pronounce Katzenbach is Katzen-baw. These few facts about the ex-Mayor of Trenton should dispel the idea that he need not be taken seriously by his rivals and the paragraphers. Whether he is not too conservative and sobergoing to suit an electorate that worships Farmer Martine in spots is a question for the political strategists to consider.—New York Sun.

EVILS OF GO-CARTS.

A woman educator asks The Tribune to call the attention of its readers to the evils of the small baby carriages or go-carts now in such common use.

"The ease with which they can be handled," she says, "has made the mothers overlook the harm that comes to the children. These carts are so small that the children are usually kept in a sitting position—sometimes for hours—even indoors, and often children are allowed to sleep in them. When tired by long sitting, and especially during sleep, the muscles of the back become relaxed and the soft, yielding bones of the spine are left to support the body. Even the effect of a slight inclination of the body will be felt and curvature of the spine will result.

"Most of the makes now in use are springless and cushionless. Only one in three, judging from the carriages being wheeled upon the Atlantic City Boardwalk, has springs, and about one in six has effective springs. The constant jarring and often jolting can only injure the delicate spine with its nerves, especially as most children are kept in a sitting position.

"These topless, springless, yet convenient carriages allow many more people to wheel the children during the evening in lighted, crowded thorfares, both in our cities and our summer resorts. The child is exposed to strong, glaring lights which have an effect even in sleep and a continuous, noisy, changing panorama which excites and tires the eyes and brain.

"An unselfish mother will be the last person to offer the only point in favor of these carriages—her own comfort—when she has had these facts brought to her attention."

A Sure Sign.

"Are the young Neweds as happy as ever?"

"I guess so. They're just as foolish about each other."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HOME RULE IN EXCISE

Sommer and "New Idea" Assembly Candidates Declare for Broad-gage Local Option.

SUNDAY SELLING VOTE

Would Take Saloon Question Out of Politics By Allowing Voters to Express Opinion at the Polls.

The leaders and various candidates of the "New Idea" movement in Newark and Essex county, have put themselves on record as favoring home rule in excise matters. The declaration issued from the headquarters of the Colbyites asserts the principle of local option on all phases of the saloon and excise question, including Sunday selling and pledges candidates, if elected, to support and labor for the enactment of a State law which will permit each locality to decide for itself what kind of excise laws it wants.

The decision is to be made by the voters in each municipality by a referendum vote. All of the eleven Assembly candidates, Senator Everett Colby, and Frank H. Sommer, the New Idea candidate for Governor, have agreed upon the measure.

The statement issued from the headquarters yesterday follows:

"In his recent public utterances Sheriff Frank H. Sommer has defined his position on the excise question and has shown that until it has been taken out of politics by leaving to the people, on the principle of home rule, the settlement of all matters pertaining to this question, it will continue to confuse the public mind and detract attention from the consideration of other problems.

We heartily concur with the sheriff in his attitude, and if nominated and elected will labor for the enactment of a law which will leave to the voters of each municipality the right to vote as to the regulation of the liquor traffic in all its phases, including that of Sunday selling."

Senator Colby said:

"I am in entire accord with the Assembly candidates on this proposition. I am entirely willing to have the people decide for themselves what kind of excise laws they want, as I do not believe their can be succesful general enforcement of any law that is contrary to the prevailing public sentiment."

Plainfield, N. J., September 4, 1907.

A WORD TO MR. PERKINS.

As the situation presents itself at present, Assemblyman Randolph Perkins is hopelessly beaten in his effort to become a perpetual candidate for the office he now holds. It is conservatively estimated that he will not get more than forty out of the one hundred and forty delegates to the county convention, and his pursuit of the nomination is useless. There can be no denial of the fact that there is some sentiment for him in Plainfield but before the delegates gather together, it is very likely that he will not be able to command the strength here that he does at present. As for Elizabeth, which holds the trump card at the convention, it is not expected that he will be considered materially at all and when the rural districts are taken into consideration his fight looks all the more fatal to him.

Mr. Perkins says he is a regular and is no sorehead. Taking him at his word, therefore, if the Westfielder wants to help his party is it not his duty to retire from the field? Through the county there has never been any great cry for his being sent back to Trenton and that condition confronts him today. The claim of the leaders has been all along that it is not because of any objection to his record that they oppose him. Something far different is the ground of their objection. They hold that he is weak with the voters and as Union county is going to be very close at the coming election is behooves the Republicans to name the strongest possible ticket. Reiterating what we said some time ago, it is our opinion that Randolph Perkins should smother his ambition by withdrawing from the race.

You haven't noticed Carlton B. Pierce running around the county to get votes, have you? He's not that type of a man.

PROPERTY OWNERS' CONSENT NOT NEEDED FOR PAVEMENT.

Corporation Counsel Says Work Can Be Done Without Property Owners' Permission.

In response to a request from the Common Council, Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh informed that body at the September meeting, last night, that the city has the right to lay a patent pavement the same as the Hassam pavement, without first securing the consent of the property-owners. When the question of laying Hassam pavement on North avenue was being discussed the point was raised in dispute as to whether the work could be done without getting the permission of the property-owners. This dispute held up the proposed improvement, it being decided to wait for an opinion from Mr. Marsh.

The corporation counsel cited several cases in other cities bearing on the one in question and then quoted the New Jersey statute to show that there is nothing to prevent the city from taking such action if it chooses.

On motion of Councilman Charles C. Randolph, claim No. 14508, referring to the recent disputed sewer trouble, was referred to Corporation Counsel Marsh for settlement with the claimants.

Resolutions of Condolence.

The roll call, responded to with quotation or incident by the members of the society was the distinctive feature of the meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the First Baptist church yesterday afternoon in the lecture room, Mrs. Yerkes presided. Resolutions of appreciation for the late Mrs. David J. Boice, who had been a manager of the society since its organization in 1873 and of sympathy for her daughters were adopted.

Dr. D. C. Adams, of Grove street, is taking a ten days' vacation.

FITZSIMMONS HAS A WATER AND PILL CURE

FOR BRINGING DOWN THE WEIGHT OF FAT MEN PLEASANTLY.

Robert Fitzsimmons and his wife are appearing this week in a sketch at the Parsons theatre, Hartford, Conn. A reporter of the Hartford Courant interviewed Fitz and learned something of what the ex-champion would do with Plainfield cops and fat sports.

The Courant man wrote:

"After a few minutes' intermission, Mr. Fitz was asked about his scheme for making athletes out of the cops in Plainfield, N. J. He said he had advised the cops to have a gym at the top of their stattion-house and do a little work two or three times a week. He said some of the policemen there could spar quite well and he put the gloves on with them when he trained. It was reported that Commissioner Bingham, of the New York force, wanted Bob to take charge of the physical development of his men but he said he did not think he could afford to give up his entire time to that kind of work.

"Fitz has got a fifty-acre farm down in Jersey and he plans to have a physical culture outfit there that will be an improvement over Billy Muldoon's place at White Plains. Muldoon's treatment is a little harsh for those who have been accustomed to having a good time all their life and Bob thinks he can get just as good results without so much hard work. About the reducing of weight, Bob says he has a sovereign remedy that he thinks has got everything else skinned forty ways. It is some kind of a water to drink and there is a pill to take every other day. No exercise is needed and the patient can eat or drink anything he likes. Bob tried it on his lawyer and took fifty pounds off in a few months. He says the lawyer is feeling fine, but Bob has not sent his bill in yet.

"At his Jersey sanitarium, Fitz is going to use the water and pill treatment on heavyweights and he says he can bring 'em all down. The famous fighter does not take on weight himself and he looks to be in prime condition. He says he likes vaudeville as it gives him more time than he had when he was in the legitimate. While he is satisfied himself, he does not think that a sketch is quite good enough for his wife and he will not be satisfied until Mrs. Fitzsimmons sings in grand opera. He has a new sketch that will be tried in a few weeks. From here, Mr. and Mrs. F. are booked to go to Philadelphia, quite a jump, but, then, Fighting Bob used to be known as the Kangaroo."

Garbage Disposal.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Trade will be held on Thursday evening. The principal feature will be a discussion of the modern systems of garbage disposal, by Col. W. F. Morse, of New York, and Charles S. Wheelwright, of Providence, R. I. This meeting is to be open to the public and it is expected that there will be a large attendance. Everyone who is interested in the question of obtaining some proper and sanitary collection and disposal system in our city, it is said, should make it a point to be present. The session will be held in the rooms of the Plainfield Business College, Woodhull & Martin building, at 8 o'clock.

Sixty Days Over Sarah.

The case of Sarah Scott and J. Thomas Johnson, who were arrested for fighting last week at the woman's home on South Second street, was decided at an adjourned hearing in the city court this morning. S. S. Swackhamer appeared for the man and W. G. DeMeza for the woman. They were released with a warning, and sixty days in jail was suspended over the woman's head. She has figured in two rows within a week.

HAIR COMING OUT?

Perhaps dandruff troubles you a little, too.

We recommend you to try "Randolph's Hair Tonic" (Quinine and Glycerine).

It is pure—it relieves the scalp of all itchings—removes and prevents dandruff.

BUILDING LINE DISPUTE

Petition of Owners of Watchung Ave. Structure Referred to Committee.

AIRED BEFORE COUNCIL

Messrs. Daniel and Mellick Consider Matter Too Serious for a Snap Decision.

Seeking to avoid the difficulty of being obliged to tear down the front of their new building, which is now about four feet over the building line, Walter F. Manning and William R. Codington, who were joined by Charles H. Hand, another interested property-owner, petitioned the Common Council last night to establish the building line twelve feet from the curb on the southwest side of Watchung avenue, between the railroad and East Fourth street. The line is now sixteen feet from the curb and in the opinion of the petitioners twelve feet would be sufficient. The street is sixty feet with a twelve foot sidewalk.

In support of the petition Mr. Codington was given the privileges of the floor to say a few words. He argued that the building is now on a line with the stone wall of the railroad bridge on Watchung avenue and if the company intended to set its wall back, the owners of the building would be willing to do likewise.

A few pertinent questions were put to Mr. Codington by President Daniel. He wanted to know if the building in its present location would not be a detriment, especially from having screen doors swing out over the sidewalk and whether it would not really be an encroachment on a public thoroughfare. Mr. Codington said that it had not occurred to him that it would be. Mr. Mellick thought the matter of too much importance to pass upon hastily. He argued that at certain times of the day great crowds pass to and from the railroad station and all the room possible is needed there so as not to congest traffic. He believed the present sidewalk to be too narrow. The matter was finally referred to the street and sewer committee and will be reported upon later.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

At the New Plainfield theatre on September 10, Eldredge & Meakin will present their sumptuous production of "Judith Of the Plains," by Mary T. Stone and Algernon Tassin. The play is in four acts. Originality in plot, the freshness of background, the real attraction of the chief participants in the powerful love story and, above all, strength and boldness in style is said to give "Judith of the Plains" a fascination which is felt by all until the fall of the final curtain.

George M. Cohan, the author and producer of "George Washington, Jr.," which will be presented here Thursday afternoon and night, has invariably been fortunate in selecting a successor for the character which he creates. For "George Washington, Jr." he has engaged Carter De Haven, a youth hardly out of his teens, but who in the short space of a few years has advanced rapidly, both as a musical comedy comedian and a headliner in vaudeville. Mr. De Haven possesses a fine singing voice and is one of the most nimble and graceful dancers on the American stage.

If Amelia Bingham had sought history and legend through, she could not have found for the protagonist of a play a more fascinating figure than Lady Godiva. True, that famous thirteenth century beauty is not the heroine of Miss Bingham's new drama, "A Modern Lady Godiva," in which she will appear at the New Plainfield theatre next Saturday afternoon and night, but because of certain similarities in the lives of the two, the one heroine suggested the other, and this parallel lends a charm to the play which otherwise it would not possess. Miss Bingham undoubtedly has the strongest role she ever had.

Theatre-goers in this city have often displayed a praiseworthy tendency to encourage musical plays of the nicer kind, but just as often has it seemed that the self sacrifice for art's sake was the only reward, owing to the lack of real entertainment in the play, but the long expected exception is about to arrive and Marie Cahill, as was true of her last offering, "Molly Moonshine," will bring us in her new musical play, "Marrying Mary," at the New Plainfield theatre, September 11, an entertainment which, while it preserves all her well known ideas of stage decorum, is yet, according to reports, one of the most entertaining things of its kind.

Only $1 to West Point.

On Sunday, Sept. 8, the New Jersey Central will have an excursion up the Hudson to West Point and Newburgh via the palatial steamer Sandy Hook. Train leaves Plainfield at 8:52 a. m., and tickets are $1. 9 4 4

SUNFLOWER PHILOSOPHY.

The man who steals from you is worse off than you are. In the end an honest dollar comes a hundred times easier than a stolen dollar.

knowledged the other with affected carelessness. "But thus far you have failed to tell me anything strikingly new. Am I to understand you have some particular object in this exchange of amenities?"

"Most assuredly. It is to ask if such a person as you practically confess yourself to be—homeless, associating only with the most despicable and vicious characters, and leading so uncertain and disreputable a life—can be fit to assume charge of a girl, almost a woman, and mould her future?"

For a long, breathless moment Hampton stared incredulously at his questioner, crushing his cigar between his teeth. Twice he started to speak, but literally choked back the bitter words burning his lips, while an uncontrollable admiration for the other's boldness began to overcome his first fierce anger.

"By God!" he exclaimed at last, rising to his feet and pointing toward the door. "I have shot men for less. Go, before I forget your cloth. You little impudent fool! See here—I saved that girl from death, or worse; I plucked her from the very mouth of hell; I like her; she's got sand; so far as I know there is not a single soul for her to turn to for help in all this wide world. And you, you miserable, snivelling hypocrite, you little creeping Presbyterian parson, you want me to shake her! What sort of a wild beast do you suppose I am?"

Wynkoop had taken one hasty step backward, impelled to it by the fierce anger blazing from those stern, gray eyes. But now he paused, and, for the only time on record, discovered the conventional language of polite society inadequate to express his needs.

"I think," he said, scarcely realizing his own words, "you are a damned fool."

Into Hampton's eyes there leaped a light upon which other men had looked before they died,—the strange mad gleam one sometimes sees in fighting animals, or amid the fierce charges of war. His hand swept instinctively backward, closing upon the butt of a revolver beneath his coat, and for one second he who had dared such utterance looked on death. Then the hard lines about the man's mouth softened, the fingers clutching the weapon relaxed, and Hampton laid one opened hand upon the minister's shrinking shoulder.

"Sit down," he said, his voice unsteady from so sudden a reaction. "Perhaps—perhaps I don't exactly understand."

For a full minute they sat thus looking at each other through the fast dimming light, like two prize-fighters meeting for the first time within the ring, and taking mental stock before beginning their physical argument. Hampton, with a touch of his old audacity of manner, was first to break the silence.

"So you think I am a damned fool. Well, we are in pretty fair accord as to that fact, although no one before has ever ventured to state it quite so clearly in my presence. Perhaps you will kindly explain?"

The preacher wet his dry lips with his tongue, forgetting himself when his thoughts began to crystallize into expression.

"I regret having spoken as I did," he began. "Such language is not my custom. I was irritated because of your haste in rejecting my advances before hearing the proposition I came to submit. I certainly respect your evident desire to be of assistance to this young woman, nor have I the slightest intention of interfering between you. Your act in preserving her life was truly a noble one, and your loyalty to her interests since is worthy of all Christian praise. But I believe I have a right to ask, what do you intend for the future? Keep her with you? Drag her about from camp to camp? Educate her among the contaminating poison of gambling holes and dance-halls? Is her home hereafter to be the saloon and the rough frontier hotel? Her ideal of manhood the quarrelsome gambler, and of womanhood a painted harlot? Mr. Hampton, you are evidently a man of education, of early refinement; you have known better things; and I have come to you seeking merely to aid you in deciding this helpless young woman's destiny. I thought, I prayed, you would be at once interested in that purpose, and would comprehend the reasonableness of my position."

Hampton sat silent, gazing out of the window, his eyes apparently on the lights now becoming dimly visible in the saloon opposite. For a considerable time he made no move, and the other straightened back in his chair watching him.

"Well!" he ventured at last, "what is your proposition?" The question was quietly asked, but a slight tremor in the low voice told of repressed feeling.

"That, for the present at least, you confide this girl into the care of some worthy woman."

"Have you any such in mind?"

"I have already discussed the matter briefly with Mrs. Herndon, wife of the superintendent of the Golden Rule mines. She is a refined Christian lady, beyond doubt the most proper person to assume such a charge in this camp."

Hampton flung his sodden cigar butt out of the window. "I'll talk it over to-morrow with—with Miss Gillis," he said, somewhat gruffly. "It may be this means a good deal more to me than you suppose, parson, but I'm bound to acknowledge there is considerable hard sense in what you have just said, and I'll talk it over with the girl."

Wynkoop held out his hand cordially and the firm grasp of the other closed over his fingers.

"I don't exactly know why I didn't kick you downstairs," the latter commented, as though still in wonder at himself. "Never remember being quite so considerate before, but I reckon you must have come at me in about the right way."

If Wynkoop answered, his words were indistinguishable, but Hampton remained standing in the open door watching the missionary go down the narrow stairs.

"Nervy little devil," he acknowledged slowly to himself. "And maybe, after all, that would be the best thing for the Kid."

CHAPTER VI.
"To Be or Not to Be."

They were seated rather close together upon the steep hillside, gazing silently down upon squalid Glencaid. At such considerable distance all the dull shabbiness of the mining town had disappeared, and it seemed almost ideal, viewed against the natural background of brown rocks and green trees. Everywhere was loneliness, no sound telling of the labor of man reached them, and the few scattered buildings far below resembling mere doll-houses.

They had conversed only upon the constantly changing beauty of the scene, or of incidents connected with their upward climb, while moving slowly along the trail through the fresh morning sunshine. Now they sat in silence, the young girl, with cheeks flushed and dreamy eyes aglow, gazed far off along the valley, the man watching her curiously, and wondering how best to approach his task.

Observing her now, sitting thus in total unconsciousness of his scrutiny, Hampton made no attempt to analyze the depth of his interest for this waif who had come drifting into his life. Even to his somewhat prejudiced eyes she was not an attractive creature, for she possessed no clear conception of how to render apparent those few feminine charms she possessed. Negligence and total unconsciousness of self, coupled with lack of womanly companionship and guidance, had left her altogether in the rough. He marked now the coarse ragged shoes, the cheap patched skirt, the tousled auburn hair, the sunburnt cheeks with a suggestion of freckles plainly visible beneath the eyes, and some of the fastidiousness of early days caused him to shrug his shoulders. Yet underneath the tan there was the glow of perfect young health; the eyes were frank, brave, unflinching; while the rounded chin held a world of character in its firm contour. Somehow the sight of this brought back to him that abiding faith in her "dead gameness" which had first awakened his admiration.

"Kid," he ventured at last, "you were talking while we came up the trail about how we'd do this and that after awhile. You don't suppose I'm going to have any useless girl like you hanging around on to me, do you?"

She glanced quickly about at him, as though such unexpected expressions startled her from a pleasant reverie. "Why, I—I thought that was the way you planned it yesterday," she exclaimed, doubtfully.

"Oh, yesterday! Well, you see, yesterday I was sort of dreaming; to-day I am wide awake, and I've about decided, Kid, that for your own good, and my comfort, I've got to shake you."

A sudden gleam of fierce resentment leaped into the dark eyes, the unrestrained glow of a passion which had never known control. "Oh, you have, have you, Mr. Bob Hampton? You have about decided! Well, why don't you altogether decide? I don't think I'm down on my knees begging you for mercy. Good Lord! I reckon I can get along all right without you—I did before. Just what happened to give you such a change of heart?"

"I made the sudden discovery," he said, affecting a laziness he was far from feeling, "that you were too near being a young woman to go traipsing around the country with me, living at shacks, and having no company but gambling sharks, and that class of cattle."

"Oh, did you? What else?"

"Only that our tempers don't exactly seem to jibe, and the two of us can't be bosses in the same ranch."

She looked at him contemptuously, swinging her body farther around on the rock, and sitting stiffly, the color on her cheeks deepening through the sunburn. "Now see here, Mister Bob Hampton, you're a fraud, and you know it! Didn't I understand exactly who you was, and what was your business? Didn't I know you was a gambler, and a 'bad man?' Didn't I tell you plain enough out yonder"—and her voice faltered slightly—"just what I thought about you? Good Lord! I haven't been begging to stick with you, have I? I just didn't know which way to turn to, after dad was killed, and you sorter hung on to me, and I let it go the way I supposed you wanted it. But I'm not particularly stuck on your style, let me tell you, and I reckon there's plenty of ways for me to get along. Only first, I propose to understand what your little game is. You don't throw down your hand like that without some reason."

Hampton sat up, spurred into instant admiration by such independence of spirit. "You grow rather good-looking, Kid, when you get hot, but you go at things half-cocked, and you've got to get over it. That's the whole trouble—you've never been trained, and I wouldn't make much of a trainer for a high-strung filly like you. Ever remember your mother?"

"Mighty little; reckon she must have died when I was about five years old. That's her picture."

Hampton took in his hand the old-fashioned locket she held out toward him, the long chain still clasped about her throat, and pried open the stiff catch with his knife blade. She bent down to fasten her loosened shoe, and when her eyes were uplifted his gaze was riveted upon the face in the picture.

"Mighty pretty, wasn't she?" she asked, with a sudden girlish interest, bending forward to look, regardless of his strained attitude. "And she was prettier than that, even, the way I remember her best, with her hair all hanging down, coming to tuck me into bed at night. Someway that's how I always seem to see her."

The man drew a deep breath, and snapped shut the locket, yet still retained it in his hand. "Is—is she dead?" he questioned, and his voice trembled in spite of his steel nerves.

"Yes, in St. Louis; dad took me there with him two years ago, and I saw her grave."

"Dad? Do you mean old Gillis?"

She nodded, beginning dimly to wonder why he should speak so fiercely and stare at her in that odd way. He seemed to choke twice before he could ask the next question.

"Did he—old Gillis, I mean—claim to be your father, or her husband?"

"No, I don't reckon he ever did, but he gave me that picture, and told me she was my mother. I always lived with him, and called him dad. I reckon he liked it, and he was mighty good to me. We were at Randolph a long time, and since then he's been post-trader at Bethune. That's all I know about it, for dad never talked very much, and he used to get mad when I asked him questions."

Hampton dropped the locket from his grasp and arose to his feet. For several minutes he stood with his back toward her, apparently gazing down the valley, his jaw set, his dimmed eyes seeing nothing. Slowly the color came creeping into his face, and his hands unclinched. Then he wheeled about, and looked down upon her, completely restored to his old nature.

"Then it seems that it is just you and I, Kid, who have got to settle this little affair," he announced, firmly. "I'll have my say about it, and then you can uncork your feelings. I rather imagine I haven't very much legal right in the premises, but I've got a sort of moral grip on you by reason of having pulled you out alive from that canyon yonder, and I propose to play this game to the limit. You say your mother is dead, and the man who raised you is dead, and, so far as either of us know, there isn't a soul anywhere on earth who possesses any claim over you, or any desire to have. Then, naturally, the whole jack-pot is up to me, provided I've got the cards. Now, Kid, waving your prejudice aside, I ain't just exactly the best man in this world to bring up a girl like you and make a lady out of her. I thought yesterday that maybe we might manage to hitch along together for awhile, but I've got a different think coming to-day. There's no use disfiguring the truth. I'm a gambler, something of a fighter on the side, and folks don't say anything too pleasing about my peaceful disposition around these settlements; I haven't any home, and mighty few friends, and the few I have got are nothing to boast about. I reckon there's a cause for it all. So, considering everything, I'm about the poorest proposition ever was heard of to start a young ladies' seminary. The Lord knows, old Gillis was bad enough, but I'm a damned sight worse. Now, some woman has got to take you in hand, and I reckon I've found the right one."

"Goin' to get married, Bob?"

"Not this year; it's hardly become so serious as that; but I'm going to find you a good home here, and I'm going to put up plenty of stuff, so that they'll take care of you all right and proper."

The dark eyes never wavered as they looked steadily into the gray ones, but the chin quivered slightly.

"I reckon I'd rather try it alone," she announced stubbornly. "Maybe I might have stood it with you, Bob Hampton, but a woman is the limit."

"I expect it will go rather hard at first, Kid," he admitted craftily, "but I think you might try it a while just to sort of please me."

"Who—who is she?" doubtfully.

"Mrs. Herndon, wife of the superintendent of the 'Golden Rule' mine;" and he waved his hand toward the distant houses. "They tell me she's a mighty fine woman."

"Oh, they do? Then somebody's been stirring you up about me, have they? I thought that was about the way of it. Somebody wants to reform me, I reckon. Well, maybe I won't be reformed. Who was it, Bob?"

"The Presbyterian missionary," he confessed reluctantly, "a nervy little chap named Wynkoop; he came in to see me last night while you were asleep." He faced her open scorn unshrinkingly, his mind fully decided, and clinging to one thought with all the tenacity of his nature.

"A preacher!" her voice vibrant with derision, "a preacher! Well, of all things, Bob Hampton! You led around by the nose in that way! Did he want you to bring me to Sunday school? A preacher! And I suppose the fellow expects to turn me over to one of his flock for religious instruction. He'll have you studying theology inside of a year. A preacher! Oh, Lord, and you agreed! Well, I won't go; so there!"

"As I understand the affair," Hampton continued, as she paused for breath, "it was Lieut. Brant who suggested the idea of his coming to me. Brant knew Gillis, and remembered you, and realizing your unpleasant situation, thought such an arrangement would be for your benefit."

"Brant!" she burst forth in renewed anger; "he did, did he! The putty-faced dandy! I used to see him at Bethune, and you can bet he never bothered his head about me then. No, and he didn't even know me out yonder, until after the sergeant spoke up. What business has that fellow got planning what I shall do?"

Hampton made no attempt to answer. It was better to let her indignation die out naturally, and so he asked a question. "What is this Brant doing at Bethune? There is no cavalry stationed there."

"Good Lord! I Haven't Been Begging to Stick with You, Have I?"

She glanced up quickly, interested by the sudden change in his voice. "I heard dad say he was kept there on some special detail. His regiment is stationed at Fort Lincoln, somewhere farther north. He used to come down and talk with dad evenings, because daddy saw service in the Seventh when it was first organized after the war."

"Did you—did you ever hear either of them say anything about Maj. Alfred Brant? He must have been this lad's father."

"No, I never heard much they said. Did you know him?"

"The father, yes, but that was years ago. Come, Kid, all this is only ancient history, and just as well forgotten. Now, you are a sensible girl, when your temper don't get away with you, and I am simply going to leave this matter to your better judgment. Will you go to Mrs. Herndon's, and find out how you like it? You needn't stop there an hour if she isn't good to you, but you ought not to want to remain with me, and grow up like a rough boy."

"You—you really want me to go, don't you?"

"Yes, I want you to go. It's a chance for you, Kid, and there isn't a bit of a show in the kind of a life I lead. I never have been in love with myself, and only took to it in the first place because the devil happened to drive me that way. The Lord knows I don't want to lead any one else through such a muck. So it is a try?"

The look of defiance faded slowly out of her face as she stood gravely regarding him. The man was in deadly earnest, and she felt the quiet insistence of his manner.

"You bet, if you put it that way," she consented, simply, "but I reckon that Mrs. Herndon is likely to wish I hadn't."

Together, yet scarcely exchanging another word, the two retraced their steps slowly down the steep trail leading toward the little town in the valley.

TIME TO ACT.

Don't Wait for the Fatal Stages of Kidney Illness—Profit by Plainfield People's Experiences.

Occasional attacks of backache, headaches and dizzy spells are common early symptoms of kidney disorders. It's an error to neglect these ills. The attacks may pass off for a time, but return with greater intensity. If there are symptoms of dropsy—puffy swewllings below the eyes, bloating of limbs or ankles, or any other part of the bohy, don't delay a minute. Begin taking Doan's Kidney Pills, and keep up the treatment until the kidneys are well, when your old-time health and vigor will return. Cures in Plainfield prove the effectiveness of this great kidney remedy.

Charles H. Lippencott, painter, of 107 Somerset street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "The statement made by me some years ago regarding what Doan's Kidney Pills had done for me was not only true at that time but now, four years later, I am glad to confirm it. I had dull, heavy pains around my groins, dreadful backache, dizzy spells and in damp weather or when I caught cold the trouble was so bad I could not get about. I tried my best to find some prescription or remedy to cure me, but without success. I was suffering intensely when I got Doan's Kidney Pills at Randolph's pharmacy, but it only required a few doses to convince me that I had the right remedy. In a short time I was cured. I have used your remedy since then and with the same satisfactory result. I am glad to say anything in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

The Millinery Department Has a Word to Say:

The work-room is crowding up pretty new fall Hats, designed by Miss Strohuber. She has seen all that is new from across the waters, having entree to the most exclusive Millinery importers in this country. And how near some of those charming hats are reproduced! One could hardly tell the original $75 hat from the very reasonable one made here, but then Miss Strohuber has that distinction—and you will see Hats here this fall such as Plainfield has not had before; and prices reasonable above all.

"CENTRAL PARK"

Was—Is—Will Be

IT WAS, only about a year ago, just a pretty farm.

IT IS to day the finest building site in Plainfield, with broad avenues macadamized their entire width, concrete curb, sidewalks, trees, gas, electric light, in fact all improvements. Nearly $100,000 expended in new and handsome dwellings, now ready for the market.

WHAT IT WILL BE we hardly dare predict, with contracts out for even more extensive improvements and twelve more handsome residences.

Central Park is that beautifully situated tract bounded by Park, Prospect, Hillside and Thornton Avenues.

Samuel Balston, of Mountainside, drove from his home to North Plainfield this morning, with a load. The load was in him. The horse was halfway up the steps, and Balston sat complacently in the buggy, urging the animal to persevere.

He was in a mellow mood, and readily consented to accompany the officer to the station house. On the way to the lockup he asked Weiss if he thought the coming winter would be a hard one. The marshal said it would be for drunks.

BOROUGH GETS $13.

As a Result of a Fight Among Italians.

Recorder Charles M. Dolliver presided over a busy session in the Borough Court, last night, when several Italians implicated in a disturbance on Race street, Saturday night, were arraigned. Owing to the fact that the prisoners could talk on English it was extremely difficult to get at the facts. As near as could be learned Samuel Ortner and "Pete" Maroni, Donato Beketo and Isaac Alfahlo were engaged in a row, the purpose being to chase all of the boarders out of the house.

Recorder Dolliver decided that Ortner and Maroni were the guilty ones. He fined the former $8 and the latter $5. Beketo was dismissed and sentence suspended on Alfahlo. Several Italians were called as witnesses; also the famous Maggie Belle Jackson's mother, but their stories were conflicting.

FOWLER ON PARTY DUTY

Congressman Maps Out a Line of Campaign for Jersey Republicans.

BETTER ELECTION LAWS

Decries Bossism and Tells How Political Conditions May Be Improved—Against Public Ownership.

In an "interview" published in this morning's New York Tribune, Congressman Charles N. Fowler, representing the Fifth New Jersey disarict, points out what in his opinion the Republican party in this State should pledge itself to do. Mr. Fowler says:

Improved Election Laws.

"First—A better primary and election law. The purification of political power lies at the very foundation of popular government. We should pledge ourselves to the enactment of a primary law that will secure to the Democrats the right to name Democratic nominees and to the Republicans the right to name Republican nominees, for a Republican has no more right in a Democratic primary, or a Democrat no more right in a Republican primary, than the stockholder of one corporation has a right in a stockholders' meeting of another corporation. But when the candidates who are to become the trustees or directors of the people's corporation—the government—have been named, every voter, Democrat or Republican—all being stockholders in the government—has a right to vote for such nominee as he regards will prove the best trustee or director of this government corporation. To this end his vote should be made sacredly secret and sacredly secure.

"Second—New Jersey should have a civil service law such as New York State has, or better.

"The reasons for retaining an employe in the service of the State are identical with those that control business men in the management of their private affairs.

Should Overthrow Bosses.

"The public service should be wrested from the hands of self-seeking political bosses.

"Our laws should be such that equal opportunities and absolute justice would be guaranteed to each and every citizen alike and no special privileges be given to any individual or corporation, by legislative enactment or through the power of personal patronage for political purposes.

"Third—Such further legislation as is necessary to secure equal taxation and justly distribute the burdens of government should be passed.

"No man will attempt to deny that all property and property rights, whether of individuals or corporations, whether of the rich or poor, without discrimination or favor, dollar for dollar in value, should bear a proportionate and equal share of the governmental burden.

"Fourth—Since the logical corollary and counterpart of legalized monopoly is legalized regulation, the state should have a utilities commission safeguarding the people's interests.

"It is now universally conceded that whenever a franchise of a public character is granted it is with the implied obligation that the charges for the sehvices rendered shall be reasonable; therefore, the directors of a corporation owning such a franchise when rightly and fully comprehending their duties and obligations must realize that they stand in a dual capacity as trustees. They, of course, will not forget themselves, the stockholders, who hold the legal title; but they must not forget the public, who still hold the equity. It is because the business of such institutions has too often been managed without due regard to the people's interests that a utilities commission is essential to represent and safeguard the people's equity in all public utilities.

"This principle is the very reverse of that of public ownership—indeed, it furnishes the only certain and effective way of obviating it.

"Public ownership is obnoxious to the genius of our people and must necessarily prove subversive of the fundamental principles of our government, wheich inspire and accentuate individula effort above all else.

"It should not be forgotten that our civilization—Anglo-Saxon civilization— is differentiated from all others because its cornerstone is a human atom. Man is its unit. Our form of government rests primarily, and must continue to rest, upon the principles of personal liberty and individualism, and therefore all legislation should conserve the freest and fullest play of the talents of every unit of the government and the broadest freedom on the part of each citizen consistent with the rights of his fellows.

DICKERSON IS PROMOTED

Plainfielder Elevated to Assistant Secretaryship of the New Jersey Central.

MADE A RAPID RISE

Started In Life As a Messenger At $8 Per Week—Recently Mr. Besler's Confidential Man.

Fred T. Dickerson, of East Second street, who has been chief clerk and private secretary to Vice President and General Manager W. G. Besler, of the New Jersey Central, has been made assistant secretary of the company by the Board of Directors. The promotion comes as a recognition of services long, faithfully and conscientiously performed. Mr. Dickerson, who will perform the duties of both positions, has risen in the service step by step through untiring individual effort, and a recognition of his ability and fidelity to his company's interests by his superior officials.

He is a man who has learned the railroad business in the hard and exacting school of practical experience, having commenced his life's work in 1883 as a telegraph messenger at the old Roseville avenue (Newark, N. J.) station of the Lackawanna, at a salary of $8 per month, during which time he studied telegraphy.

The late George L. Bryant was at that time train master of the High Bridge Branch of the New Jersey Central, and to him young Dickerson made application for a position, which was given him. He was first assigned to the Lake Hopatcong station as telegraph operator and assistant agent on April 1, 1884, in which capacity he served for a short time, when he was advanced to the agency of that station, and later had charge of more important stations on the branch, serving also for two years in the train master's office. In 1891 he was transferred to the executive offices of the company in New York city as general clerk, where he was later advanced to the position of Chief Clerk to the Controller.

Starting thus, twenty-three years ago, Mr. Dickerson has since been in the continuous service of the New Jersey Central, serving through several administrations, but keeping everlastingly at the work assigned him, and the recent recognition accorded him by his superiors is as pleasing to his friends outside the pale of the railroad service as it is to the "Jersey Central" rank and file, with whom he is widely known, and deservedly popular.

SH! KEEP IT DARK.

Colbyites Have a Little Star Chamber Session Themselves.

Some of the New Idea leaders held a conference last night at the home of N. Mansfield Smith, secretary of the Fourth ward organization. It was a star chamber session, and the conferees covenanted to say nothing as to what took place at it for publication.

It is known, however, that the general situation and plans for the campaign were freely discussed. It is understood that the chairmanship of the City Committee, which has been put up to the Colbyites by the regular organization men in the body, was one of the things talked over. Perkins, and his wobbling campaign for renomination, was another.

The original Colbyite uses as one of his chief complaints against the organization that it is given to "back stairs" methods, but perish the thought right here.

Salvationist to Lecture.

Colonel William Margetts, of New York, will give his popular lecture tonight in the Salvation Army Hall on East Second street at 8 o'clock entitled, "Our Young Crusaders." Colonel Margetts has the supervision of the Army's work among the children of the Eastern States and is a very interesting speaker. There will be special singing by the Sunday-school children and other special features. All are cordially invited.

His telephone number is 524-W. Mr. Crane is a graduate of Yale and has been very thorough in his preparation for the practice of law.

ACKERMAN'S WORK DONE

State Senator Will Sail for Home on Saturday, Having Completed Investigation.

MODES OF PUNISHMENT

Plainfielder Has Spent Ten Weeks in Europe Studying Methods for State Senate Committee.

Having completed his work of investigating the modes of punishment for capital crimes, in other lands, State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, of this city, will sail for home on Saturday. He is now in Paris and has engaged a suite de luxe on the Lusitania, the newest and finest trans-Atlantic steamship, of the Cunard line, which stops off Cherbourg Saturday morning. The Plainfielder is due to arrive in New York the following Saturday afternoon and will come direct to his home here.

Senator Ackerman will not discuss his mission at any length until he reports to Governor Stokes, who gave him credentials to officials in England and on the Continent. His official report will be filed with the Senate committee appointed to investigate methods of capital punishment and as that body will not meet until just before the next session of the Legislature, his definite findings cannot be learned for some time.

Mr. Ackerman is now stopping at the Elysee Palace Hotel, one of the finest European hostelries, in Paris. He has been in consultation with several of the Ministers of the French Cabinet and has also had a talk with the Prefect of Police as to ways of dealing with high crime. During his ten weeks' stay abroad, he has also studied his subject in London and other smaller cities in England and has also pursued his mission in Belgium, Holland and Germany. It is said that he has gained much valuable information.

M'CARDELL WANTS TO BE REAPPOINTED

The appointees are: Heber, Wells, Paterson; August Graf, Hoboken; Joseph Milburn, Trenton; Henry Kuehnle, Egg Harbor City; Miss Mary F. Van Leer, Camden, and Miss Mary McKean, Moorestown. Miss McKean is the only new member of the force, the others being all reappointed.

The remaining inspectors to be named by the Governor are the successors of Edward E. McClintock, of Newark; William Schlachter, of Orange; James E. Stanton, of Sussex; Andrew McCardell, of this city, and Louis Holler, of Camden. There are various candidates for all these places and the Governor has not fully determined yet whom he will appoint.

Factory Inspector McCardell is quite sure of re-appointment. He visited the Governor yesterday to urge his retention in office.

CHALLENGES PERKINS TO A PUBLIC DEBATE

W. M. BURKE ASKS OFFICE-SEEKER TO MEET HIM HERE.

Assemblyman Randolph Perkins now has the opportunity he craved at the New Idea meeting last Friday night to be asked some questions about his record in the Legislature, the Local Option people having issued a challenge from their Newark office. One willing to debate with him on that subject, particularly on his position on the local option bill last winter has come forward in the person of Prof. William M. Burke, of Newark, a brother of State Superintendent J. Frank Burke, of the Anti-Saloon League of New Jersey. Mr. Burke asks Mr. Perkins to meet him in public debate at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium on Friday night.

Here is the challenge sent to Mr. Perkins this morning:

"Hon. Randolph Perkins,
"Westfield, N. J., also Jersey City.
"Dear sir:

"We note by the paper that you are endeavoring to make some people believe in spite of your hostility to the church forces that you favor local option. We are surprised at this position, after the abundant opportunity you have had to defend your position in nearly every city of your county and be confronted by those who are working in the interests of local option.

"I hereby deny that you are, or ever have been, friendly to the people's rights to govern themselves upon the question of license. I challenge your public statement upon this matter and will be glad to meet you upon the platform on Friday evening, September 6, at 8 o'clock, in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium in the city of Plainfield. I want to remind you that this is not J. Frank Burke, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, who sends the challenge to you who you have repeatedly refused to meet, but W. M. Burke, a different person entirely, so the excuses you have made will not obtain in this case.

"I will be there to speak on Friday evening and will speak in the open air if you do not appear. I count upon your appearance.

"Yours truly,
"W. M. BURKE.

"P. S.—We are sending this in duplicate to Westfield and Jersey City and will also send copies to newspapers."

A. E. SMITH LOWEST BRIDGE WORK BIDDER

CONTRACTOR WHO THREW UP JOB MAY GET IT AT HIGHER FIGUER.

The bridge committee from the Union County Board of Freholders received bids at the court house, Elizabeth, yesterday, for the construction of a proposed new bridge over Robinson's branch of the Rahway river at Rahway. Several weeks ago bids were received for this work and at that time Arthur E. Smith, of this city, was the lowest bidder and was awarded the contract. Afterward he learned that he had made a mistake in his figures and he gave up the contract. This necessitated re-advertising for bids and yesterday was the time fixed for receiving them.

In the first instance Mr. Smith's bid was $9,300 and the appropriation of $10,000 for the work was sufficient. Yesterday the bids were much higher and if the bridge is built the board will have to appropriate another $1,000, which it is hoped will be done today. Mr. Smith is still the lowest bidder, his figures being $10,445. The other bids are as follows:

Turnbull Construction Company, of New York, $14,661; Weldon, of Rahway, $13,736; J. W. Heller, of New York, $10,784; W. T. Kirk Iron Company, Plainfield, $10,845; Russell Contracting Company, of New York, $11,458; Industrial Engineering Company, of New York, $11,162

The plans call for a single span re-inforced concrete bridge. The W. T. Kirk Iron Company also submitted plans and figures for a steel structure, the bid being about $7,000, but as the specifications called for re-inforced concrete the committee could not consider the other bid. The Board of Freeholders will meet at the court house today in regular session, when the question of building the bridge will be decided.

On Robert Davis Outing.

James E. Martine and D. J. Carney attended the outing of the Robert Davis Association of Hudson County to College Point yesterday. Nearly 6,000 made the trip. F. S. Katzenbach, of Trenton, was there also. He and Mr. Martine made speeches.

STEPS IN DEATH'S PATH

Austrian Laborer's Unfamiliarity With Surroundings Cost Him His Life.

ON CENTRAL R. R. TRACKS

He Had Worked On the Section Gang Only Two Days—Head Crushed In By West-bound Local.

Unfamiliar with his surroundings, and unpracticed in guarding against the dangers about him, Boltolo Stefeno, 55 years old, walked blindly in the path of death on the tracks of the Central Railroad yesterday afternoon. He was struck and instantly killed by a west-bound local, near Berckman street.

Stefeno was an Austrian laborer. He got a job on the section gang two days ago. He had never worked on a railroad before, and having lived in this city only three months he didn't have even a general idea of how traffic went on the road. His unfamiliarity with his environment was plainly the cause of his death. He stepped out of the way of an east-bound freight, waited until it had passed, and then walked to the west-bound track without a glance up the road. The local was almost on him as he reached the rails, and he was struck before he had time to realize what was impending. His skull was crushed.

Stefeno lived at 80 St. Mary's avenue, with a second wife and a grown son, Michael Stefeno. He came to this city from Newark in June. Another son lives in Austria.

The body was taken to the undertaking rooms of George Cole, on West Second street. The funeral will be held from St. Mary's church tomorrow morning at 8:30 o'clock. The burial will be at St. Mary's cemetery.

Chief Doane in speaking of the matter today, remarked that the system is well cared for and is now in better shape than ever before.

WANTS TO BE BANKRUPT

For His Banking Firm, Anderson C. Wilson, of this City, Files Voluntary Petition.

LIABILITIES $3,699,900

Plainfielder Claims That His Partners Are Insolvent—Proceedings At Trenton.

Anderson C. Wilson, of West Seventh street, this city, a member of the banking house of J. M. Ceballos & Co., of New York, which made an assignment to William B. Rowe last October, filed a petition in the United States district court at Trenton, yesterday, asking that the firm be declared bankrupt. Mr. Wilson, it is said, requested the other partners, Juan M. Ceballos, of Bay Shore, and John S. Fiske, of Westhampton, to join with him in filing the petition, but they refused.

Wilson charges that both Mr. Ceballos and Mr. Fiske are individually insolvent, as well as the firm, and says he is willing to surrender all its property for the benefit of creditors.

The petition places the liabilities of the firm at $3,699,900, and the assets at $300, the latter consisting merely of household goods. One liability set out is for the payment of $500,000 claimed by the Newfoundland Syndicate of New York for an unpaid subscription of J. M. Ceballos for the capital stock of the syndicate.

Mr. Wilson says he has no information as to the amount realized by the assignees from the disposal of the assets of Ceballos & Co.

AFTER SERVING SENTENCE WOMAN GETS HER MONEY.

Funds the Warden Held Are Ordered Turned Over to Her By the Court.

Agnes Bushman, who robbed Rudolph Brunner, of Westfield, of several rings, at the opening of the present term of court plead non vult and was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail by Judge Atwater. Mr. Brunner began a civil suit in the district court of Elizabeth, against her for the recovery of $125, the value of the two rings.

Just a day or so before the expiration of her sentence, Jail Warden Charles Dodd received a notice from Mr. Brunner that in case of the woman's discharge before the civil suit was tried not to pay over to her any money he had belonging to her.

The woman's lawyer, succeeded in having her discharged. When the warden refused to hand over $235 he held belonging to her, her lawyer began suit in the district court to compel him and Sheriff Lawrence to refund the money. Judge Swift gave the woman judgment today for the amount. The civil suit which Mr. Brunner brought against the woman was set down for today, but has been postponed until September 19.

MUST ATTEND WEDDING

Daughter Has Obstinate and Jealous Mother Arraigned in Court.

TRIED TO SPOIL MATCH

Ma Cinquegrani, Angry Over Pa Cinquegrani's Fondness For His Favorite Child, Acts Spitefully.

To save her wedding from wreck, Miss Mary Cinquegrani, nineteen years old, daughter of Juliano Cinquegrani, who conducts the biggest fruit store in the city, had her mother arraigned in the city court this morning on a charge of disorderly conduct.

The story is of a mother's jealousy of her daughter. Mary is Cinquegrani's favorite child, and Mrs. Cinquegrani became convinced, five years ago, that the loving husband had been superceded by the doting father. She says Mary got prettier dresses than she did, that Mary's tastes were consulted in all the family arrangements, and that Mary's side of family disputes were always espoused by Cinquegrani pere. Trouble became a constant factor in the Cinquegrani family as soon as the mother became obsessed by her jealous notion.

It reached a climax last week, when Mary became engaged to a prosperous young Italian banker of New York. It was too good a match to please the jealous mother, and she set about to break it up. She told tales without truth about Mary, and crowned them with the declaration that she would not permit the girl to marry at home and would not attend the wedding. The stories did not effect Mary much, because they were easily disproved, and nobody paid any too much attention to them, but the threat to stay away from the wedding was another thing. Such an action in the eyes of respectable Italians, especially when coupled with the statements the mother had made, would have made the marriage an "impossible" one. Mary shivered every time she thought of what Giovanni's people would say when they found that Mrs. Cinquegrani would not lend countenance to the marriage. It might easily lead to an abrupt termination of the wedding, and would certainly lead to a lifetime of trouble for her husband.

So Mary, seeing nothing else to do, swore out the complaint, basing the charge on the stories the mother had spread. She hoped that the majesty of the law would overawe her mother into promising to attend the wedding.

The plan worked. Mrs. Cinquegrani was stubborn at first, but she gave way finally. She said frankly that she was jealous of Mary, but insisted that she meant no harm to the girl. Still, she had her feelings, she pointed out, and she'd be hanged, or words to that effect, if she would allow the wedding to take place in her house, or grace it with her presence. Never, never, never. All this in voluble Italian, which was interpreted by Detective-Sergeant Brancati.

Judge Runyon, by way of experiment, said she would have to go to the wedding or be locked up until after it was over. Mrs. Cinquegrani didn't care. Jail or no jail, she wouldn't help Mary to get married. That attitude lasted for five minutes. The possibility of actually spending a month or two in a cell impressed her and she weakened. Pleading by Cinquegrani completed her surrender, and she promised, on condition that Cinquegrani agree to stay away from Mary's home when she married, to attend the wedding. She promised also, to make no sneering remarks at the nuptials.

Mary smiled the first smile her face has worn in a week.

In Honor of Mrs. E. B. Leland.

The Union-Sun, of Lockport, N. Y., under date of August 30, contains an interesting account of a charming reception given by Mrs. Almon M. Graham and Miss Graham, of that place, in honor of Mrs. Erwin B. Leland, of this city, on Thursday afternoon, August 29. It was one of the social functions of the season, being largely attended by society people from Lockport and elsewhere. Mrs. Walter C. Huestis, of Minneapolis, also a guest shared in the honors of the affair.

Trolley Car Jumps the Track.

While one of the Fourth street trolley cars was turning into the street from Monroe avenue, at 8.30 o'clock, last night, the wheels left the track and skidded to the gutter, where it struck a trolley pole. There were but two or three passengers in the car and they escaped injury. The only damage to the car was the breaking of the running board. The P. S. C. wrecking car was summoned and quickly put the trolley back on the tracks.

—L. C. Sheppard and family have moved from Central avenue to Somerset place.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $5 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

FORMER NEWSPAPERMAN BUYS BOWLING ALLEYS

OHNNIE CAMPBELL NEW OWNER OF M'LAUGHLIN'S PLACE.

With the end of the baseball season in sight bowlers are getting together and an active season among local pin smashers is anticipated. The opening of the local season is marked by the entry of a newcomer in the ranks of local bowlers, John Campbell, a former newspaperman and up to Saturday last assistant manager of the Tuxedo Bowling Academy, Newark. Mr. Campbell has purchased the alleys on East Second street, which were conducted last season by Warry McLaughlin and assumed full charge Tuesday, when the legal papers in the transfer were passed. Mr. Campbell is no stranger to Plainfield and has many friends here. He is himself an expert bowler and rolled on the Tuxedo B team, of Newark, last winter. Mr. Campbell is now busy on plans for several tourneys which will be started as soon as cooler weather sets in and the prospects are that Plainfield pin knights will have a busy season before them. Mr. Campbell is already laying lines to secure Johnny Voorheis, William Weingarth, Jimmy Smith, Joseph Norton and other crack bowlers to roll exhibitions here.

DIAMOND DUST.

With the Labor Day games the Inter-City Amateur League season closed. Whether it has been a success is a matter of opinion. In some respects it has been, but there were only three teams in the league with any drawing power—Clinton Avenue, Y. M. C. A. and Scotch Plains. The Laurels, of Bound Brook, and Dunellen with its numerous successors, failed to come up to expectation. There is much to be learned from the first season of the league and it is to be hoped that the officials will profit by it. The two Plainfield teams with Scotch Plains and three additional outside teams of equal strength should make a strong league and there is an opportunity to organize early.

The local fans would like to see Somerville represented in the league. It would make a desirable rivalry and tend to increase the attendance which is needed. Somerville would like to place a team in the league and there is no reason why she should not succeed.

If Westfield can organize strong enough it would be well to include that town and possibly it would be well to give Rahway an opportunity to get in. These towns are close enough together to make the scheme practical and if there is to be enthusiasm there must be real rivalry. The trolley connections between Somerville, Plainfield and Rahway are such as to make travel easy and cheap. If the league is to succeed next year it must be strengthened in many ways and it is to be hoped that steps will be taken in this direction at an early date.

SMALLEY FAMILY REUNION.

Held on Banks of Raritan River—Plainfielders Among Guests.

About forty members of the Smalley family gathered on the banks of the Raritan River at New Brunswick Labor Day and held a reunion. Numbered among those present were three generations of the family, the youngest being Marion Ward, of South Orange, a granddaughter of Charles W. Smalley, of that place. It was decided to hold a larger reunion next year, at which time it is hoped to have between 150 and 200 members of the family present.

The hosts were William, Edward, Isaac and Charles W. Smalley, all sons of the late Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Smalley, on whose farm the celebration was held. Among those who were present were Mrs. John Dayton, Percy Dayton, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Martin, of this city; Mrs. Byron Cheston, of Princeton; Edward Smalley and family, of Rocky Hill, and Mrs. August Cedar, of South Orange.

Miss Vera Linbarger, of this city, was one of the assistants at a delightful social function given Monday afternoon and evening by Mr. and Mrs. Elias Van Fleet at The Rocks, Lake Hopatcong, N. J. The entertainment was in celebration of their twenty-fifth summering at Lake Hopatcong.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Amelia Bingham, the famous actress-anager, has been offered a contract calling for a season of forty continuous weeks at $2,500 per week by the Keith and Proctor syndicate. She refused with the remark, "That the emoluments were insufficient." She will be seen in "The Modern Lady Godive," Saturday afternoon and night.

Geo. M. Cohan's most popular success, "George Washington, Jr.," will be presented at the New Plainfield theatre tonight by the Cohan & Harris comedians. For the past two seasons this play has enjoyed such phenomenal prosperity, that its engagement in New York, Boston, Chicago and a few principal cities have been extended so many weeks that the country at large has not had an opportunity of witnessing it. This season, however, an extensive tour is being made with the complete original production and the majority of the original cast.

The musical critics are agreeing that one of the foremost of the younger composers in America is Silvio Hein who wrote "Marrying Mary," a musical play in which Marie Cahill will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre, September 11. Hein's music seems to contain everything demanded by the term "popular" an yet to include a sufficiency of classic stamine to demand serious attention. He is evidently good at orchestration, for his work in this regard has been generally mentioned wherever the music has been heard.

"Judith of the Plains" is said to be a congenial drama of the right sort, rich in humor, abounding in delightful character studies and telling most convincingly an ingeniously devised and absorbing plot, the theme of which is a delightful love story. Independent of this, there is interwoven and forming background another plot, which is said to be as interesting as it is exciting, and holds one's attention until the denouement of the play. Its scenes are laid in the great Northwest where the country is rich in its own naturalness which gives opportunity for great and effective scenic display. The play will be seen here September 10.

Mr. and Mrs. Fernando M. Ward, of New York, will return here on October 1 to occupy their home on Fairview avenue.

Rev. Ell Loofboro, of Riverside, California, is a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. Valois St. John, of Division street.

WHERE HELP IS NEEDED.

The Netherwood Fresh Air Home has been abandoned for the year and the King's Daughters' Baby Camp will bring its season to an end tomorrow. The former institution has been exceedingly fortunate in having been well remembered by the general public in the way of support, but it is a regretable fact that a still more worthy charity has not fared so well. It is no reflection on the work carried on by the Fresh Air Camp managers to say that there is not a more needful institution than that conducted by the Kring's Daughters, whose efforts have not met with half the amount of support that they deserve.

From early summer until early fall, this admirable society cares for the babies at its specially provided home on the mountain. There the little tots of Plainfield's poor are nursed and strengthened by self-sacrificing women whose pity amounts to more than mere words. To carry on the undertaking properly money and provisions as well as clothing and sundry other things are absolutely necessary. These have not been so freely given as the circumstances warrant. Can anyone explain why it is?

FOWLER HEARD FROM.

Dropping down from his Vermont home long enough to let the people of Union county know that he is still living, Congressman Charles N. Fowler, who, by virtue of being able to obtain a couple of hundred more votes than his competitor in this rock-ribbed Republican district, still represents Union, Warren and Morris in Congress, has relieved himself of some burning thoughts. In an "interview," which bears the earmarks of having been carefully prepared by himself and sent as a "contribution" to the New York newspaper morgue, the Tribune, the greatest statesman of modern times points out to his party its true path of duty. We are glad to republish Charles Napoleon's effusion, if for no other purpose than to let his constituents know that this second Daniel Webster or Henry Clay has been within twenty miles of his own district since his last election.

Major Martin Third.

Riflemen of Co. C, of the Fourth New Jersey Regiment, won yesterday in the New Jersey Rifle Association's company team and tyro company team matches. In the Spencer match, fifteen shots at 1,000 yards, Private J. W. Hessian, of Wilmington, Del., took fourth prize ($10), scoring 69. Major W. B. Martin, of the Second Regiment, made a score of 58. In the inspectors' match, won by Captain S. W. Wise, of Massachusetts, Major W. B. Martin was third with a score of 86.

Margaret Tallamy.

Magaret Tallamy, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bertram F. Tallamy, died yesterday at the home of the parents on West Front street, following an illness of four weeks with a complication of troubles. She was fifteen months old. The funeral services, which will be private, will be held from the home of the parents tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Samuel Balston Fined $2.

Samuel Balston, of Mountainside, arrested on Somerset street, the borough, yesterday, on a disorderly charged, was given a hearing before Recorder Dolliver in the borough court, last night. A fine of $2 was imposed and it was paid.

Last Dollar Excursion to Hopatcong.

The last of this season's dollar excursions to Lake Hopatcong via New Jersey Central will leave Plainfield at 9:51 a. m. on Sunday, September 8. The lake is more beautiful than ever.

WANT SITE FOR ARMORY

Captain in Somerville Makes Request at Somerset Freeholders Meeting.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Bids Received and Contracts Awarded For Construction of Bridges—Mr. Bunn's Complaint.

A special meeting of the Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders was held in the court room in Somerville, yesterday. Captain George K. Koehler, of Company M, Somerville, asked the members to select a site for building an armory. This is to be purchased by the county, and is subject to the approval of the State Military Board, under an act of the Legislature of 1907. Messrs. Fitzgs, Smith and Vreeland were appointed a committee to confer with a delegation from the company, and to report at a subsequent session of the Freeholders.

Freeholder Bunn, of Bernards township, declared that the roads and bridges in his district had been damaged by Philip Koechlein, who had run a heavy steam roller over them and the subject was referred to Counsel John A. Frech.

The following bids were received for the construction of the Sachs bridge in Warren township: John C. Cooper, $108; William Conner & Son, $275; Martin E. Blazure, $89.99. Bids were received as follows for the erection of the Voorhees bridge in Hillsborough township. John C. Cooper, $7.35 a cubic yard; A. Schuyler, $7; Andrew R. Holcomb, $6.90; W. H. Ely, $8.50; Arthur E. Smith, $10.80.

Bids for the Whitlock bridge in Montgomery township were as follows: A. R. Holcombe, $7.50 a cubic yard; W. H. Ely, $7.19; A. Schuyler, $8.98.

The contract for the Sachs' bridge was awarded to Martin E. Blazure, for the Whitlock bridge to W. H. Ely and for the Voorhees bridge to Andrew R. Holcombe. The director was authorized to execute the contracts.

"Personal initiative has been the chief source of all of our achievements, greatness and glory, and must remain the sole hope of our continued advancement. Therefore, no man or corporation should be permitted to gain any advantage whatever over any other man or corporation through the forms of law.

"Let us remind that the development of American individualism, the chief characteristic of our citizenship, constitutes the one ommeasurable resource of the most powerful and inspiring people of the globe.

Popular Election of Senators.

"Fifth—The Republican party should pledge itself to the popular election of United States Senators—a reform already adopted by eighteen States of the Republic. No attempt should be made to deceive the public by the enactment of a law that will disfranchise all the Republicans of any county which may, perchance upon a given occasion, go Democratic.

"A Repuglican living in a county which seldom goes Republican has as much right to a voice in the election of a United States Senator as a Republican residing in a county which seldom goes Democratic.

"To pass a law that would compell the counties to vote by counties for Senator would only incite the politicians of every county to put for ward favorite sons for political purposes, and thue make our position tenfold worse than it is today.

"The Senator and the Assemblyman of each county having performed their delegated function in voting for a favorite son would then be open to dicker and trade precisely as they are today and be subjected to interests and influences which should have no voice in selecting United States Senators for New Jersey. Our United States Senators should be as distinctly the choice of the people of New Jersey as our Governors are.

"Let the Republican party be wise enough to comprehend the public conscience; let it be courageous enough to execute the commands of the public will. The past of our party is secure, and we can point with commendable pride to its achievements, bue the election this fall must depend upon specific declarations and unequivocal pledges of what the party will do if again in trusted with power."

Stokes Favors Lewis.

Judge Collins and Vivian M. Lewis are being talked of more than others for the Republican gubernatorial nomination. Governor Stokes is said to be disposed toward the latter, and Senator Briggs is reported to be back of his boom.

READY FOR SCHOOL DAYS

Dr. Krebs Announces Plans for Opening of Fall Term in North Plainfield.

SOME NEW TEACHERS

Benjamin Phelps to Be Principal of Somerset Street High School

Other Changes Are Made.

The day anxually awaited with much pleasure by some and much dreaded by others is the first day of school. In common with the city schools the borough institution will reopen on Tuesday morning, the high and grammar grades at 8:20 o'clock, the other grades at 9 o'clock. The supervising principal, Dr. H. C. Krebs, will be in the office at the Somerset school on Monday from 9 until 12 and from 1:30 to 3, at which time all pupils who have nexer attended the borough schools are requested to present themselves for classification. At 4 o'clock Monday there will be a general teachers' meeting for the presentation of plans and programs for the year.

Janitor McDonald has been putting in his summer vacation preparing the Somerset school for the opening, and his work has been well done. Toilets are being put into the new wing for the exclusive use of the small children. The other toilets have been thoroughly renovated. Electrician Craig is putting the last touches on the clocks and bells. The walls of the office have been tiled, and similar improvements made in the various classrooms. The Watchung school, under the direction of Janitor Lunger, will present its customary fine appearance on the opening day.

It is a matter of congratulation that, of the twenty-eight teachers who last year taught the departments below the high school, twenty-six will return for the coming year. Miss Butler and Miss Hare will be succeeded by Miss Miln and Miss Bauersachs respectively.

In the high school department, Benjamin Phelps will assume the duties of principal. Mr. Phelps is a Yale graduate, has been vice president of Pennington Seminary for five years, director of athletics at that institution for three years, and is thoroughly equipped for the work of his position. He will devote one-half of his time to supervision, and will teach three history classes.

Miss Agnes Scudder, a graduate of Wesleyan College, Conn., will succeed Miss Bradley as teacher of English. Richard J. Kieffer, a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, Pa., will succeed Mr. Bender as teacher of science and mathematics. Miss Denneen, of the domestic science department, will be replaced by Miss Helen Ingersoll, of South Orange, a graduate of Pratt Institute.

The session of the high school and grammar departments has for many years extended from 8:20 to 1, with a short recess at 11 o'clock. It was found that, by this system, pupils arrived home too late for the regular lunch, and therefore often had to content themselves with a "cold bite." The long time between breakfast and lunch led many pupils to eat during the recess, generally candy, cake, or pie. To overcome these two objectionable features the recess has been abolished, and the morning session shortened to 12:30. Under this arrangement pupils will arrive at their homes before 1 o'clock, and there will be no necessity of eating at 11 o'clock. Moreover an afternoon session has been established for these two departments, from 2 to 3. Pupils who have not been late, and whose conduct and recitations have been satisfactory, are excused from the afternoon session. All others are required to attend. All teachers will be in their class-rooms daily from 2 to 3. Individual instruction will be given at this time, not only to those who are required to be present, but to all others who may wish to study under the guidance of the teachers. This arrangement of sessions has been used during the last year with much success in the public schools of East Orange.

It is believed that the return of so many of last year's teachers, together with the addition of thoroughly competent new teachers, will result in marked success to the schools during the coming term.

SENATE MAY PASS LOCAL OPTION BILL

REPUBLICAN MAJORITY SAID TO BE CONSIDERING SUCH A COURSE.

There is an impression of little weight among legislators and politicians who gathered at the State House Tuesday that an effort would be made by the Republican majority in the Senate to pass a local option bill when the upper house of the Legislature meets again next week, or possibly the week after.

While none of the party leaders seen here yesterday would commit himself to an expression of his views on the question, it is known that there is a very decided sentiment favorable to such a course.

"If the Senate should put through a local option measure that had general approval," remarked one regular prominent in the councils of the party, it would settle this excise question for the next twenty years."

Among those seen about the corridors of the capitol during the day were Congressman Fowler, former Governor Voorhees, Senators Hillery, of Morris; Robbins, of Burlington; Hutchinson, of Mercer; Assemblyman Perkins, of Union; Quartermaster-General Murray, Attorney-General McCarter, State Comptroller Morgan, State Treasurer Voorhees, Chancery Clerk Lewis, Supreme Court Clerk Riker, Banking and Insurance Commisioner Watkins, Secretary of State Dickinson, David Baird, of Camden; Theodore Strong, of Middlesex; Major Lentz and a score of lesser lights.

Senators Hillery and Robbins were closeted all morning with Theodore Backes, of the Attorney-General's office, drafting the new public utilities bill. The bill, its understood, will be completed at the end of the week. Senators Hillery and Robbins are both very quiet about the exact contents of the measure, both begging to be excused from talking until they have completed the proposed measure.

Asemblyman Perkins says he is making a hard fight for renomination and expects to win. He intimated that the "other side" may be fooled upon some of the delegates they are counting on. Mr. Perkins said he could not see defeat at this time.

THE COMING LANGUAGE.

English is now spoken by about 125,000,000 people. A century ago it was spoken by 20,000,000 people only. During that period no other leading European language has made the slightest advance. German has held its own, and is spoken now by 80,000,000, but this is no higher percentage of the total number of people of European descent than it had 100 years ago.

The United States alon, it is estimated, will contain 300,000,000 when the twenty-first century dawns. As the learning of English is compulsory in India, 300,000,000 more people are being annexed to the English-speaking world.

The leading languages of continental Europe at the beginning of the last century—French, German and Spanish—while declining or stationary in Europe itself, are making gains on other continents. There are only 18,000,000 Spaniards in Spain, but 35,000,000 Americans talk Spanish.

Some 20,000,000 people speak German outside of Germany, and twice as many people talk Portugese in Brazil as there arein Portugal, itself, while French is the language of 14,000,000people outside of France.

CHURCH AND CLERGY.

Sa. James' Episcopal church of South Bend, Ind., has secured a small piece of marble as a relic from the tomb of St. John in Jerusalem.

It is rumored in Rome that Mgr. Lorenzelli, former apostolic delegate to France, will be made cardinal to succeed the late Cardinal Svampa.

The Rev. Farrell Martin, D. D., pastor of St. Cecelia's church, Waterbury, Conn., was recently graduated from the New York Law School. He thus becomes a lawyer as well as a priest and is one of the few men in this country that enjoy this distinction.

A round the world Sunday-school tour was one of the schemes growing out of the recent convention in Rome. It is supposed to leave New York in December, 1908, with a maximum company of 500 delegates and hold conventions in Cairo, Bombay, Colombo, Shanghai, Seoul and Tokyo and Washington, D. C.

Serving twenty-nine years in the pulpit without a penny in the way of salary is the record of the Rev. Victor Hugo Webb, rector of Trinity Episcopal church of Monmouth, Ill. In addition to being the head and main-stay of the church, Mr. Webb may be said to be the leading citizen and moving spirit of the thriving little city of Monmouth.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Schaffauss, of Fairview avenue, have returned from Kentucky, where they have been visiting Mrs. Schaffauss' mother.

George M. Clark, of West Eighth street, has been spending several days at the summer home of Mrs. George H. Babcock, Westerly, R. I.

Mr. and Mrs. George F. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, of the borough, who are sojourning at "The Elvin," Pocono, Pa., will return home on Friday.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Sept. 8: "Receiving the word." "The seed is the word of God."—Luke viii, 11-15.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Passages for reference—Josh. i, 8; Ps. 1, 2; Isa. lv, 10, 11; Mark xiii, 31; John v, 24; Heb. ii, 1-2.

Human nature is full of strange contradictions. This is well illustrated in the parable of the sower. The real force of the teaching of Jesus in this parable is not so much with the sower or the seed as with the ground. It might well be called the parable of the soil, for it deals with the different kinds of folks and the manner in which they receive the truth.

It was Carlyle who said, "Man is the born enemy of lies." It was an older one whose powers of observation were not less keen who remarked, "I said in my haste, all men are liars." There is much of truth in both sayings, even if both are not wholly true. There is nothing in which the interests of all men are more bound up than in truth and reality. We are everywhere hedged in by things and forces which we cannot change. There is a nature of things. Our safety and well being depend on our knowing things as they are. Falsity exposes us to danger of every sort.

Our interests are all on the side of truth. We surely must be enemy to all falsity. But what one have you ever seen who has been wholly loyal to the true?

There is strange soil in this race of ours. But why say in the race? Look over the field of your own nature and if at all keen of observation you will discover all the varieties of soil described by the Master in the parable in your own garden patch.

There are paths all over your thinking which have been beaten hard by the feet of custom and the ways of the world. Can you not remember in the days gone by when seed of good fell all over these places and you knew they ought to be plowed and made soft for the seed, but the seed never sprouted that fell there? It was trodded down by passing feet and eaten by fowls of the air. Lost seed, barren footpaths!

What have you to say of the thorn patches and places where the underground ledges crop up close to the surface? Have you not seen these in the past years? Much of this could be wonderfully improved if we but gave thought to it, but we are busy about many things.

Don't give this lesson all away to others; some of it belongs of right to you. You have received the word. Pray, how have you received it? You have some good and productive places in your nature. Have you no poor and barren spots? If you have, what are you saving them for? Does it pay to continually feed birds on precious seed and waste other on thorn tangles and thin soil?

One of the lessons thrifty farmers have to learn is not to cultivate too much in area, but to cultivate well what is under tillage. That is the lesson we Christians need to heed. We spread over too much and do not do it well. Intensive rather than extensive cultivation is our need. Receive the word of God and see that the soil is prepared for it. Every part of your nature needs it. There should be no footpaths for things of the world to use, no fence corners filled with briers and thorns, no stony ground with little soil.

Study yourself a trifle and learn what you are and see how you can make improvement in this soil matter. Remember you will gather no more harvest than you make. Barren ground is very expensive to maintain. Can you afford to keep so much as you have?

Complaining About Our Work.

Whence comes it that we have so many complaints, each saying that his occupation is a hindrance to him, while notwithstanding his work is of God, who hindereth no man? Whence come this inward reproof and sense of guilt which torment and disquiet you? Dear children, know that it is not your work which gives you this disquiet. No; it is your want of order in fulfilling your work. If you performed your work in the right method, with a sole aim to God and not to yourselves, your own likes and dislikes, nor sought your own gain or pleasure, but only God's glory in your work, it would be impossible that it should grieve your conscience. It is a sign for a man if he have not done his work properly, but so imperfectly that he has to be rebuked for it, for this is a sure sign that his works are not done in God, with a view to His glory and the good of his neighbor.—John Tauler.

The Moral Aristocracy.

Along the line of moral character—blessed be God!—the poorest child can be eminent. You can have God's own certificate for faith and goodness. You were born in a garret. You may go to heaven if you obey the laws of Divine Providence as shown in history, in revelation and in the cross. You started life without a friend. You may die amid a multitude of angels. You may never be a genius, you may never write a "Paradise Lost" or a "Paradise Regained" or an "Iliad"—there you may be nothing and nobody—but as to your character, prayer, love, faithfulness, honor—why, you may belong to the Miltons and the Shakespeares and the Homers of the moral aristocracy. And remember that goodness is the only enduring brilliance. There is a splendor of virtue that is possible to the least, the lowest soul.—Joseph Parker.

Sacrifices.

Very few of us will have the chance of heroic self devotion, but every day brings the petty wearing sacrifice, which weighs full weight in God's scales.—Samuel Osgood.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 8.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—God's omnipresence.—Ps. cxxxix, 1-12.

The word omnipresence means everywhere present—in short, that God is everywhere present when the word is applied to Him. This is one of the great attributes of God. He is everywhere. (1) He is everywhere in what is called His immanence. This does not mean pantheism or that all nature is God and the only God, but at the same time the spirit and power of God are present throughout the entire natural world, in every flower and plant and tree. (2) God is everywhere present in that He sees the entire universe from the depths of the human heart to the highest heavens. His spirit also dwells in our hearts if we are His through faith in Jesus Christ, His Son, "who loved us and gave Himself for us."

The psalmist most comprehensively sets forth the omnipresence of God. (1) He applies this truth to the individual. "O Lord, Thou hast searched me; Thou hast known me; * * * Thou compasseth my path and my lying down and art acquainted with all my ways." We can do nothing that God does not know; we can go nowhere without finding Him present. In the depths of our hearts we can think no thoughts that He cannot read and see and know. How careful, therefore, we should be of our thoughts, words and deeds! "Thou God seest me" should lead us to make our lives just what God wants them to be. (2) The psalmist also applies this great truth to space. "Whither shall I go from Thy spirit?" If to heaven, if to hell, if to the uttermost parts of the earth, "Thou art there." There is no escape from God. We cannot sin against Him or reject His Son, our Saviour, and escape God. Adam and Eve tried to hide from God, but they were unsuccessful. So has every one else been who has made a similar attempt. The only way to flee from God is to fly to Him, and then only can we find peace of soul and forgiveness of sin. As Augustine said, "Thou hast made us for Thyself, and the heart is restless till it rest in Thee."

BIBLE READINGS.

I Kings viii, 22-27; Isa. lxvi, 1, 2, Jer. xxxiii, 23-32; Matt. xviii, 19, 20; xxviii, 19-20; Rev. iv, 1-5.

Three Foreign Notes.

Lord Langford, president of the committee in charge of the last Irish Christian Endeavor convention, in his address of welcome said that the history of the Christian Endeavor movement is one of the most marvelous of stories and that God's providence has been very apparent through it all.

In a recent address Rev. John Pollock, president of the European Christian Endeavor Union, told how Dr. Clark had once told him he hit upon a name for the society after writing the first clause of the Christian Endeavor pledge, "I will strive to do," etc. It was after writing that word "strive" that the happy thought struck him to call it a society of Christian Endeavor—a society of Christian strivers.

India Christian Endeavor tells a soul stirring story of how the Christian Endeavorers of one society conquered the universal fear of cholera among the natives and went out in Christ's name through all the nearby country as the disease appeared to sing, pray and comfort both the sick and their friends, and instead of timidity and distaste they found ever increasing joy filling their hearts as the opportunities multiplied and were seized.

A Byproduct of the Boer War.

An interesting testimony to the value of the Endeavor movement is given in the Sunday at home by the founder, Dr. F. E. Clark, describing work among Boer prisoners during the late war. In St Helena alone there were nineteen societies, with a membership of nearly 1,000. In Ceylon ten societies were formed, with about 800 members, while six Island societies in the Bermudas had 500. Intense missionary enthusiasm was evoked, resulting in 175 young men giving themselves to missionary work. On their return to South Africa a missionary institute was promptly provided, for the missionary spirit had come to pervade the whole Dutch church as well as the prison camps. This byproduct of the Boer war will prove its noblest legacy. "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness."—Christian, London, England.

Mountain Mission Note.

John Willis Baer, in an account of a visit to the Appalachian mountain region, says, "I saw men who in years gone by had illicitly distilled whisky in the mountain stills, whose past lives had been stained with sin, but who had given their hearts to Jesus Christ, and at the table of the Lord it was a rare privilege for me to sit with them and listen to their testimony of the saving grace and power of the Son of God."

New Blood Constantly.

"A Christian Endeavor society," says the Texas Christian Endeavorer, "needs new blood constantly. A society consisting of the same individual members for several years without change is sure to be sluggish in circulation, stiff in the joints and slow to mend. And it doesn't matter how good the quality of those members either."

In the Eyes of an Editor.

William T. Stead once declared that one advantage of the Christian Endeavor society is that it brings so many admirable young men and young women together, giving them a chance to get acquainted and resulting in so many wise and fortunate marriages.

CHAPTER VII.
"I've Come Here to Live."

Widely as these two companions differed in temperament and experience, it would be impossible to decide which felt the greater uneasiness at the prospect immediately before them. The girl openly rebellious, the man extremely doubtful, with reluctant steps they approached that tall, homely, yellow house—outwardly the most pretentious in Glencaid.

They were so completely opposite, these two, that more than one chance passer-by glanced curiously toward them as they picked their way onward through the red dust. Hampton, slender yet firmly knit, his body held erect as though trained to the profession of arms, his features finely chiselled, with threads of gray hair beginning to show conspicuously about the temples. His attire of fashionable cut black cloth, and his immaculate linen, while neat and unobtrusive, yet appeared extremely unusual in that careless land of clay-baked overalls and dingy woolens. Beside him, in vivid contrast, the girl trudged in her heavy shoes and bedraggled skirts, her sullen eyes fastened doggedly on the road, her hair showing ragged and disreputable in the brilliant sunshine. Hampton himself could not remain altogether indifferent to the contrast.

"You look a little rough, Kid, for a society call," he said. "If there was any shebang fit this mud-hole of a town that kept any women's things on sale fit to look at, I'd be tempted to fix you up a bit."

"Well, I'm glad of it," she responded, grimly. "I hope I look so blame tough that woman won't say a civil word to us. You can bet I ain't going to strain myself to please the likes of her."

"You certainly exhibit no symptoms of doing so," he admitted, frankly. "But you might, at least, have washed your face and fixed your hair."

She flashed one angry glance at him, stopping in the middle of the road, her head flung back as though ready for battle. Then, as if by some swift magic of emotion, her expression changed. "And so you're ashamed of me, are you?" she asked, her voice sharp but unsteady. "Ashamed to be seen walking with me? I know you are! But I tell you, Mr. Bob Hampton, you won't be the next time. And what's more, you just don't need to traipse along another step with me now. I don't want you. I reckon I ain't very much afraid of tackling this Presbyterian woman all alone."

She swung off fiercely, and the man chuckled softly as he followed, watchfully, through the circling, red dust cloud created by her hasty feet. The truth is, Mr. Hampton possessed troubles and scruples of his own in connection with this contemplated call. He had never met the lady, but he retained some memory of the husband as having been associated with a strenuous poker game at Placer, in which he also held a prominent place, and it would seem scarcely possible that the wife did not know whose bullet had turned her for some weeks into a sick nurse. A cordial reception could hardly be anticipated, and Hampton mentally braced himself for the worst.

It was a cheerless looking house, painted a garish yellow, having staring windows, and devoid of a front porch, or slightest attempt at shade to render its uncomely front less unattractive. Had the matter been left at that moment to his own decision, this glimpse of the house would have turned them both back, but the girl unhesitatingly pressed forward and turned defiantly in through the gateless opening. He followed in silence along the narrow foot-path bordered by weeds, and stood back while she stepped boldly up on the rude stone slab and rapped sharply against the warped and sagging door. A moment they stood thus waiting with no response from within. Once she glanced suspiciously around at him, only to wheel back instantly and once more apply her knuckles to the wood. Before he had conjured up something worth saying the door was partially opened, and a rounded dumpling of a woman, having rosy cheeks, her hair iron-gray, her blue eyes half smiling in uncertain welcome, looked out upon them questioningly.

"I've come to live here," announced the girl, sullenly. "That is, if I like it."

The woman continued to gaze at her as if tempted to laugh outright, then the pleasant blue eyes hardened as their vision swept beyond toward Hampton.

"It is extremely kind of you, I'm sure," she said at last. "Why is it I am to be thus honored?"

The girl backed partially off the doorstep, her hair flapping in the wind, her cheeks flushed.

"Oh, you needn't put on so much style about it," she blurted out. "You're Mrs. Herndon, ain't you? Well, then, this is the place where I was sent; but I reckon you ain't no more particular about it than I am. There's others."

"Who sent you to me?" and Mrs. Herndon came forth into the sunshine.

"The preacher."

"Oh, Mr. Wynkoop; then you must be the homeless girl whom Lieut. Brant brought in the other day. Why did you not say so at first? You may come in, my child."

There was a sympathetic tenderness apparent now in the tones of her voice, which the girl was swift to perceive and respond to, yet she held back, her independence unshaken. With the quick intuition of a woman, Mrs. Herndon bent down, placing one hand on the defiant shoulder.

"I did not understand, at first, my dear," she said, soothingly, "or I should never have spoken as I did. Some very strange callers come here. But you are truly welcome. I had a daughter once; she must have been nearly your age when God took her. Won't you come in?"

While thus speaking she never once glanced toward the man standing in silence beyond, yet as the two passed through the doorway together he followed, unasked. Once within the plainly furnished room, and with her arm about the girl's waist, the lines about her mouth hardened. "I do not recall extending my invitation to you," she said, coldly.

He remained standing, hat in hand, his face shadowed, his eyes picturing deep perplexity.

"For the intrusion I offer my apology," he replied, humbly; "but you see I—I feel responsible for this young woman. She—sort of fell to my care when none of her own people were left to look after her. I only came to show her the way, and to say that I stand ready to pay you well to see to her a bit, and show her how to get hold of the right things."

"Indeed!" and Mrs. Herndon's voice was not altogether pleasant. "I understood she was entirely alone and friendless. Are you that man who brought her out of the canyon?"

Hampton bowed as though half ashamed of acknowledging the act.

"Oh! then I know who you are," she continued, unhesitatingly. "You are a gambler and a bar-room rough. I won't touch a penny of your money. I told Mr. Wynkoop that I shouldn't, but that I would endeavor to do my Christian duty by this poor girl. He was to bring her here himself, and keep you away."

The man smiled slightly, not in the least disconcerted by her plain speech. "Probably we departed from the hotel somewhat earlier than the minister anticipated," he explained, quietly, his old ease of manner returning in face of such open opposition. "I greatly regret your evident prejudice, madam, and can only say that I have more confidence in you than you appear to have in me. I shall certainly discover some means by which I may do my part in shaping this girl's future, but in the meanwhile will relieve you of my undesired presence."

He stepped without into the glare of the sunlight, feeling utterly careless as to the woman who had affronted him, yet somewhat hurt on seeing that the girl had not once lifted her downcast eyes to his face. Yet he had scarcely taken three steps toward the road before she was beside him, her hand upon his sleeve.

"I won't stay!" she exclaimed, fiercely, "I won't, Bob Hampton. I'd rather go with you than be good."

His sensitive face flushed with delight, but he looked gravely down into her indignant eyes. "Oh, yes, you will, Kid," and his hand touched her roughened hair caressingly. "She's a good, kind woman, all right, and I don't blame her for not liking my style."

"Do—do you really want me to stick it out here, Bob?"

It was no small struggle for him to say so, for he was beginning to comprehend just what this separation meant. She was more to him than he had ever supposed, more to him than she had even been an hour before, and now he understood clearly that from this moment they must ever run farther apart—her life tending upward, his down. Yet there was but one decision possible. Then he answered, "This is your best chance, little girl, and I want you to stay and fight it out."

Their eyes met, each dimly realizing, although in a totally different way, that here was a moment of important decision. Mrs. Herndon darkened the doorway and stood looking out.

"Well, Mr. Bob Hampton," she questioned, plainly, "what is this going to be?"

He glanced toward her, slightly lifting his hat, and promptly releasing the girl's clinging hand.

"Miss Gillis consents to remain," he announced shortly, and, denying himself so much as another glance at his companion, strode down the narrow path to the road. A moment the girl's eyes followed him through the dust cloud, a single tear stealing down her cheek. Only a short week ago she had utterly despised this man, now he had become truly more to her than any one else in the wide, wide world. Then Mrs. Herndon came forth quietly and led the girl, now sobbing bitterly, within the cool shadows of the house.

CHAPTER VIII.
A Last Revolt.

It proved a restless day, and a sufficiently unpleasant one, for Mr. Hampton. For a number of years he had been diligently training himself in the school of cynicism, endeavoring to persuade himself that he did not in the least care what others thought, nor how his own career ended; impelling himself to constant recklessness in life and thought. He had thus successfully built up a wall between the present and that past which long haunted his lonely moments, and had finally decided that it was hermetically sealed. Yet now, this odd chit of a girl, this waif whom he had plucked from the jaws of death, had overturned this carefully constructed barrier as if it had been originally built of mere cardboard, and he was compelled again to see himself, loathe himself, just as he had in those past years.

One thing he grasped clearly,—the girl should be given her chance nothing in his life must ever again soil her or lower her ideals. Mrs. Herndon was right, and he realized it; neither his presence nor his money were fit to influence her future. He swore between his clinched teeth, his face grown haggard. The sun's rays bridged the slowly darkening valley with cords of red gold, and the man pulled himself to his feet by gripping the root of a tree. He realized that he had been sitting there for hours, and that he was hungry.

Down beneath, amid the fast awakening noise and bustle of early evening, the long discipline of the gambler reasserted itself—he got back his nerve. It was Bob Hampton, cool, resourceful, sarcastic of speech, quick of temper, who greeted the loungers about the hotel, and who sat, with his back to the wall, in the little dining-room, watchful of all others present. And it was Bob Hampton who strolled carelessly out upon the darkened porch an hour later, leaving a roar of laughter behind him, and an enemy as well. Little he cared for that, however, in his present mood, and he stood there, amid the black shadows, looking contemptuously down upon the stream of coatless humanity trooping past on pleasure bent, the blue smoke circling his head, his gray eyes glowing half angrily. Suddenly he leaned forward, clutching the rail in quick surprise.

"Kid," he exclaimed, harshly, "what does this mean? What are you doing alone here?"

She stopped instantly and glanced up, her face flushing in the light streaming forth from the open door of the Occidental.

"I reckon I'm alone here because I want to be," she returned, defiantly. "I ain't no slave. How do you get up there?"

He extended his hand, and drew her up beside him into the shaded corner. "Well," he said, "tell me the truth."

"I've quit, that's all, Bob. I just couldn't stand reform any longer, and so I've come back here to you."

The man drew a deep breath. "Didn't you like Mrs. Herndon?"

"Oh, she's all right enough, so far as that goes. 'T ain't that; only I just didn't like some things she said and did."

"Kid," and Hampton straightened up, his voice growing stern. "I've got to know the straight of this. You say you like Mrs. Herndon well enough, but not some other things. What were they?"

The girl hesitated, drawing back a little from him until the light from the saloon fell directly across her face. "Well," she declared, slowly, "you see it had to be either her or—or you, Bob, and I'd rather it would be you."

"You mean she said you would have to cut me out entirely if you stayed there with her?"

She nodded, her eyes filled with entreaty. "Yes, that was about it. I wasn't ever to have anything more to do with you, not even to speak to you if we met—and after you'd saved my life, too."

"Never mind about that little affair, Kid," and Hampton rested his hand gently on her shoulder. "That was all in the day's work, and hardly counts for much anyhow. Was that all she said?"

"She called you a low-down gambler, a gun-fighter, a—a miserable barroom thug, a—a murderer. She—she said that if I ever dared to speak to you again, Bob Hampton, that I could leave her house. I just couldn't stand for that, so I came away."

Hampton never stirred, his teeth set deep into his cigar, his hands clinched about the railing. "The fool!" he muttered half aloud, then caught his breath quickly. "Now see here, Kid," and he turned her about so that he might look down into her eyes, "I'm mighty glad you like me well enough to put up a kick, but if all this is true about me, why shouldn't she say it? Do you believe that sort of a fellow would prove a very good kind to look after a young lady?"

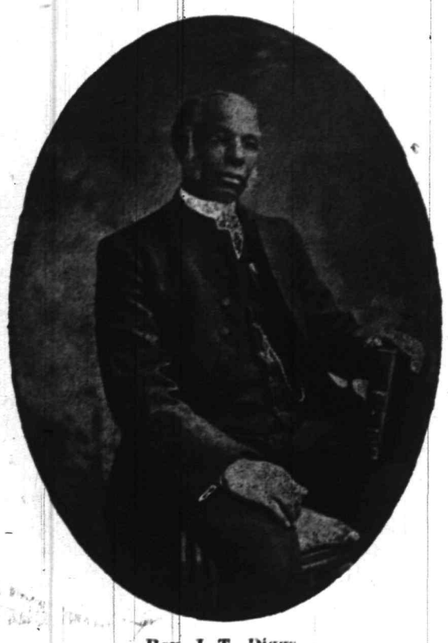
MT. ZION A. M. E. CONGREGATION HONORS ITS NEW PASTOR



Rev. J. T. Diggs.

The members of the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church are tendering their pastor, Rev. J. Thomas Diggs and bride, a reception this afternoon and evening. Mr. Diggs is the oldest member in standing in the New Jersey A. M. E. conference and has served most of the largest churches in the conference and has officiated three terms as presiding elder during his thirty-five years in the conference.

Bishop W. J. Gains at Orange last April appointed Mr. Diggs to the pastorate of the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church from the Mt. Zion church, of New Brunswick. During the four months of his pastorate here, the church has purchased the Frank Burke property, 523-525 West Fourth street, for a parsonage to the church.

Mr. Diggs was recently married to Mrs. Catherine D. Farley, of Newark, by Rev. W. D. Davis, her pastor, and they will occupy the newly-purchased property. The officers and members of the Mt. Zion church have completed arrangements for the reception to be held today, when the pastor and his bride will receive their friends. John Jones and Rev. E. B. Maynard have charge of the affair.

EAST JERSEY DOUBLES ON ELIZABETH COURTS

CRAGIN AND KELLEY QUALIFY FOR THE FINAL MATCH.

The second semi-final match in the lawn tennis doubles in the tournament of the East Jersey L. T. A. was played yesterday on the courts of the Elizabeth Town and Country Club, Elizabeth, N. J. Calhoun Cragin and Carleton C. Kelley of the West Side T. C. met Edwin P. Larned and George M. Niles of the Orange L. T. C. The result was a victory in straight sets for the New York players. The score was 6—4, 6—4. The New Yorkers showed more even tennis as doubles players. Larned was the winner of the men's singles, recently finished, at Elizabeth, but he was not able to carry along successfully as a team against the two others.

This result leaves only one more match to be played in the East Jersey tournament for 1907. The winners of yesterday on Saturday will meet Miles S. Charlock and William B. Cragin, Jr., of the Elizabeth club, in the final round. The Cragins are brothers, Calhoun being the older. This final on Saturday will end the tournament, a decision already having been reached in men's singles, won by E. P. Larned; women's singles, won by Mrs. William H. Pouch; mixed doubles, won by Mrs. B. C. Edgar and L. Dunham, and women's doubles, won by Mrs. W. H. Pouch and Miss Marie Wagner. The summary:

East Jersey L. T. A. Men's Doubles—Semi-final round — Calhoun Cragin and Carleton C. Kelley, West Side T. C., defeated Edwin P. Larned and George M. Miles, Orange L. T. C., 6—4, 6—4.

DIAMOND DUST.

How about the series of games scheduled between Clinton Avenue and Somerville? The fans are anxiously waiting to see the contests.

Although he did not sign with any regular team this season, Jimmie Montross has been doing good work for various clubs. The latter part of the season he has been with the West Ends, of Somerville, and although the team has not won a majority of games it was not his fault.

Mike Donlin has repented and returned to the Giants, where he will continue to play ball. He has signed for next season as well.

FORT READY TO RUN

Says He Would Accept Nomination for the Governorship.

BUT WON'T SCRABBLE

If the Honor Comes to Him, All Well and Good, But He Will Not Go After It.

Justice John Franklin Fort, of the Supreme Court, upon his return yesterday from an extended trip abroad, set at rest all speculation as to his position with regard to becoming the Republican candidate for Governor of New Jersey. Justice Fort stated that he would accept the nomination and resign from the bench to make the fight if the nomination came from the party of its own free will and initiative. He made clear that he would not solicit the honor.

Stepping from the gangplank of the stemship Romanic, in Boston, he made his attitude clear to a reporter, and immediately left Boston for East Orange to prepare to resume his judicial duties.

"Indorsed by the "Big Five," echoed Justice Fort, in response to a query as to that effect. "Who comprise the 'Big Five?' I have a recollection of seeing that appellation in print, but, having taken no active interest in politics for years, I was not sufficiently interested to ascertain who the members of the 'Big Five' really were."

Justice Fort dismissed the reference to former Senator James Smith, Jr.'s, indorsement as being absurd, and jocularly added that, if nominated, he would welcome the support of any good Democrat and of all Republicans, as the latter, of course, are all good. Becoming serious again, the justice referred to the political situation, and, after paying a compliment to Sheriff Frank H. Sommer, whom he spoke of as a highly respected friends, he said:

"My present position is one in which I am contented and happy. I have no desire to give it up and shall do so, if called upon to make the sacrifice, with regret, although I shall not hesitate to accept a nomination for the governorship if it comes to me as the unsolicited act of my party. I am feeling splendid, both physically and mentally, and am ready to take up my judicial duties which are to me a delight, or to meet others if they shall come with all the zeal and ability I can bring to the performance of them.

"I cannot talk generally of politics of the last ten years. Ever since I first went on the bench of the Court of Common Pleas of Essex county I have absolutely desisted from doing anything political. In that time I have not even attended a political meeting. My ideas of judicial propriety on that subject are quite fixed. I have not been kept informed during my absence of anything political in New Jersey.

"I cautioned all my family before I left not to write me anything political or about politics. I have had, I think, but two letters with anything in them on the subject; not even a newspaper clipping was sent to me. I know, of course, something of the sentiment on the governorship, as it was being expressed throughout the State at the time I left.

"Just what strength, if any, there was in it, so far as I was concerned, I neither know nor endeavor to ascertain. Of course, I appreciated the disinterested friendship that prompted the mention of me in connection with the governorship. Who would not? But I have not done anything to promote the movement looking to my nomination. If it comes, it must come without any act of mine.

"As to Alden Freeman's personal attach, I have nothing to say at this time; but if honored with the Republican nomination I will leave the bench, and may then, with propriety, reply to any attack that may be made on my personal character by Mr. Freeman or anybody else."

Funeral of Boltolo Stefeno.

The funeral service of Boltolo Stefeno, the Australian laborer who was killed on the New Jersey Central near Berckman street, on Wednesday was held at 8.30 o'clock this morning from S. Mary's church, where Father Bogan conducted a requiem mass. There were about twenty friends of the dead man present. Burial was in St. Mary's Cemetery and pallbearers from among the man's friends acted in that capacity.

FREEHOLDERS AWARD SMITH THE CONTRACT

APPOINT A COMMITTEE AND REFER A PETITION.

The Union County Board of Freeholders at the September meeting, held yesterday, awarded to Arthur E. Smith, of this city, the contract for building the new bridge over Robinson's branch of the Rahway river, his bid being $10,445. This was done after the board appropriated an additional $1,000 for the work, the previous amount not being sufficient to cover the cost. Mr. Smith will start the work at once and complete it before cold weather.

The question of making South Broad street, Elizabeth, a State aid road, was introduced and finally referred to a committee comprising Director King and Freeholders Cady, Woodruff and Krausse to ascertain certain facts before taking any action. It is necessary to learn the terms of the franchise allowing the P. S. C. to operate its trolley on that street before anything is done.

The board received a communication from the North Plainfield Council asking that Green brook in this city be made sanitary. The communication was received and referred to Freeholders J. Hervey Doane and S. P. T. Wilbur, who will confer with the county attorney in reference to it. It was the opinion of some of the members that the work of cleaning the brook in Plainfield is up to Plainfield and North Plainfield and not the counties. The freeholders are expected to keep the brook clean about the county line bridges, but their jurisdiction ceases there.

MRS. LEAR HUNTS FOR HER MISSING SONS

DISAPPEARED AFTER SHE REMARRIED FIFTEEN YEARS AGO.

Mrs. Sarah Lear, formerly of this city, but now of Westfield, is making every effort to find her two sons, Stephen M. B. Anderson and Adam B. Anderson, who disappeared from Plainfield fifteen years ago, when she as a widow married Adam Lear, of Westfield. Since then she has not seen her sons and has been unable to learn of their whereabouts.

At different times she has heard reports about the missing sons, but investigation failed to throw any light on the mystery. Recently, Mrs. Lear heard that her sons were living in Plainfield and she is now doing all in her power to locate them. The young men are about 35 and 39 years old respectively at the present time.

CONGREGATION GREETS ITS PASTOR AND HIS BRIDE.

Big Reception For Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Diggs at A. M. E. Zion Church.

The officers and members of the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church gave a reception to their pastor, Rev. J. T. Diggs and his bride, at the church, last night. The affair was attended by about 150 members and friends of the church. Elaborate decorations were provided.

During the evening there was an informal program, including vocal solos by Edward Blair and Elmer Thompson and readings by Miss Ella Sumpter. Among the clergy present were Rev. W. O. Davis, of Newark, who married Mr. and Mrs. Diggs; Rev. J. W. Cooper, of Rahway, and Rev. G. B. Smith, of Camden, former pastors of the church, and Rev. A. V. Henry, of Bound Brook, one of the founders of the local church. Each one made an address, congratulating the pastor and his bride and the church upon acquiring such a beautiful parsonage. The reception also maked the possession of the new parsonage, which had been comfortably furnished for Mr. and Mrs. Diggs.

During the evening refreshments were served. John Jones was the general chairman of the affair, while Miss Agnes Holmes was chairman of the refreshment committee. They were assisted by other members and officers of the church.

GARBAGE DISPOSAL TALK

Two Successful Methods Presented to the Board of Trade.

REDUCTION, CREMATION

Both Systems, It Is Said, Will Make the Plant Self-Sustaining—Stuff to Sell or Power?

Two systems of disposing of garbage were explained to the Board of Trade last night. Col. W. F. Morse, an advocate of incineration, and D. S. Gordon, representing a reduction process, spoke on the disposal methods which each favored. Health Officer Leon R. Thurlow also spoke.

The meeting was slimly attended. W. R. Codington was chairman and A. S. Herr was secretary. The Board met at the Plainfield Business College.

Mr. Thurlow spoke first, on the necessity for some disposal system other than the present one. He said:

"Plainfield has the reputation of being one of the best governed cities of the State, but if each prospective resident questioned as to garbage disposal many would turn away. This is a serious condition. The Board of Health cannot recommend any collector as regular and certain. The wagons, horses and equipment are unsanitary, unsightly and ancient.

"Many complaints were received as to garbage collectors last year. Rules made by the Board bettered conditions a bit, but since one of the garbage collectors was brought into court the regulations no longer hold. Most of the complaints we receive are against accumulation of garbage and rubbish. This is particularly true of the poorer sections of the city.

"Economically considered, the present system is most expensive. The cost in the aggregate for an irregular and incomplete removal is between $12,000 to $15,000. The sum of $12,000 would pay for a complete removal under municipal management. The addition of $12,000 on the tax list would not advance the taxes of the house owner to any degree comparable to the sum now paid for independent removal."

Mr. Gordon, who took Charles S. Wheelwright's place, the latter having been taken ill yesterday afternoon, told how garbage, separated from rubbish and ash, might be made to yield money by reduction. The garbage, by this system, is put in steam chests where it is boiled and all grease and solids are tried out. The grease is sold to soapmakers and the solids, after drying, are sold for fertilizer. It is estimated that a reduction plant here, where the garbage will average ten tons a day, would be self-sustaining.

Col. Morse argued for a complete system of disposal. He said the reduction method rejected rubbish and ashes, which formed a big percentage of a city's waste, and incineration, which handled everything, was what a community needed. He showed a number of views, illustrating several kinds of cremations. He estimated that a plant in this city could burn all its garbage, furnish power for seventy-five electric lights and for pumping the sewage, and cost nothing for disposing of the waste substances.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

Delegates Who Will Name Gubernatorial Nominee Will Number 1,210.

The Democratic State convention, which will be held at Trenton, September 17, will be composed of 1,210 delegates, making 606 votes necessary for the choice of the Gubernatorial nominee.

The delegates by counties will be as follows: Atlantic, 34; Bergen, 69; Burlington, 43; Camden, 92; Cape May, 18; Cumberland, 33; Essex, 186; Gloucester, 23; Hudson, 208, Hunterdon, 28; Mercer, 67; Middlesex, 44; Monmouth, 58; Morris, 45; Ocean, 20; Passaic, 72; Salem, 18; Somerset, 27; Sussex, 25; Union, 65, and Warren, 28.

Strong Left All to Wife.

The will of the late Judge Woodbridge Strong has been probated by the Surrogate at New Brunswick. It provides for the payment of debts and then directs that the remainder of the estate be left solely to his wife, Mrs. Harriet A. H. Strong, who is made the sole executrix. The will is dated February 3, 1872, and is witnessed by Samuel Carlton and Silas D. Grimstead. Mr. Grimstead was connected with the office of Judge Strong at the time.

Resume Sunday Services.

All Souls' church on Park avenue, will reopen on Sunday after the vacation period, with a service at 10.30 o'clock in the morning. The pastor, Rev. A. C. Nickerson, will preach.

TILLMAN FOR PERKINS?

Reported that He Won't Take Federal Job but Will Help Westfielder.

NAME COLORED MAN

Fourth Ward Colbyites Pit Negro Against Chairman Smith For County Committeeman.

Assemblyman Peter Tillman, of Rahway, according to a report in circulation here this morning, has gone back to the New Idea men in their fight to obtain a renomination for a fourth term for Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, of Westfield. Mr Tillman was not in the county today and the story could not be verified. As the rumor runs, however, it is said that he has thrown up the position of inspector of denatured alcohol, which appointment he accepted rather than became a candidate for a fourth term and make the fight with the Westfielder. Whether he will now become a candidate is likewise not known, but it is stated that he has decided to hang on to his old job in the cement works instead.

As the New Idea men in the Fourth ward have placed Richard Norwood on their slate for membership in the county committee from the First district of that ward, a negro will succeed County Chairman Frank H. Smith if the Colbyites triumph in that ward. The chances for success, however, are considered extremely remote. Mr. Norwood was placed on the New Idea slate when the Colbyites decided to give fitting recognition to the help extended by the colored voters in Plainfield to the New Idea cause at the last primaries. There are about 1,200 colored voters in the city and the race played no small part in bringing about the great showing made by the Colbyites at that time.

Assemblyman Perkins was in town this morning for a short time. His friends say that it is not likely that he will accept the Local Option League's challenge to a debate tonight. If he does not show up, Prof. W. M. Burke will give an open air talk in front of the North Avenue station.

COURTHOUSE WORK IS AGAIN HELD UP

BRICKLAYERS CALLED OUT ON SYMPATHY STRIKE.

For a second time within a month work on the new marble court house for Somerset county has been stopped at Somerville. It is now quite probable that the foundations will not be in readiness for laying the cornerstone on October 1, as has been arranged.

There is no local trouble this time. The masons, however, have been called out by the National Bricklayers' Union, because the contractors, Fissell & Wagner, of New York, are employing non-union men on some of their construction work in other parts of the country. It is believed to be the purpose of the union to force the contractors to employ union men only on all their work.

Fissell & Wagner have dissolved partnership, but it is not expected this will hinder the progress of the construction of the new court house in Somerville.

Tomkinson, of Cape May, have issued cards announcing the marriage of their daughter, Laura Myrna, to William Hunt Carson, of Port Deposit, Md., on Tuesday, September 3, at Cape May. C. C. The exhibition opened yesterday and will be continued today and tomorrow.

P. E. RECTORS NOT ABSENT

Rev. Mr. Stevenson Draws Attention to Fact that His Church Wasn't Neglectful.

EXPLAINS SITUATION

Clergyman Says There is a Mighty Host of Indifferent People—Speaks Out His Conviction.

The news story on the absence of Protestant pastors from both city and borough during August, published in these columns some days ago, is responsible for the following letter received from Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson. In compliance with his wish it is given the same prominence as the news article.

This is the communication:

Editor, The Daily Press:

Your facetious leader of recent date bearing title of "Dearth of Ministers," has much point, but, if you will pardon me, is not strictly accurate. Your primary statement is to the effect that "last week the city was virtually without a Protestant pastor." This statement can scarcely apply to the Episcopal church in the community: perhaps it was not intended to. If you speak as a "Good Churchman," Mr. Editor, you would not of course reckon our clergy as Protestant pastors. If you are of the other kind, then one may easily appreciate why you should overlook us entirely in the enumeration of working forces.

As a matter of fact, however, the Episcopal church in Plainfield was adequately provided with her clergy. The Reverend Arthur S. Peck, rector of St. Stephen's church, was absent from his parish on two separate days only in August. During the same month the Reverend George Warner was in town every week for three days. From the chancel he announced his willingness to remain in town or to return when his services were required by any Christian person. He further left his address with a prominent undertaker that he might be on call for service at any time. I am unable to say that the clergy of Grace church were represented during the weeks days of August, but we had arranged and it was fully advertised that by the courtesy of the rectors of St. Stephens', and the Church of the Holy Cross all calls sent to them should receive prompt attention. In addition to this the Reverend E. M. Rodman advertised his readiness to return from Saunderstown at any time; and during the month of August I myself was in communication with the parish and within easy call in emergency. This does not seem like total neglect.

Just a word more. Your news article implies indifference and neglect from the clergy to the public generally, not to the church-going people in particular. Church people know they are not neglected. They know that their clergyman will respond to their call, of whatever nature it be, at any time and with every inconvenience. There is not wanting proof of that fact. But the non-church-goers, you say! Yes, surely the non-church-goers. Don't you know that there is a mighty host of indifferent people to whom the clergyman serves the dual purpose of being a mark for their easy contempt and complaint in life, and the necessary though sombre figure at an irreligious and profunctory function in death. That is about the size of it. The Church of Rome is pretty nearly right and the Protestant bodies are pretty nearly wrong. I am ready at all times to help any man who needs my help or sympathy, but I tell you frankly and honestly that I have more than once felt a peculiar awkwardness in being raked in on such mournful occasions obviously as the mere appendix to the undertaker and the hearse.

We shall certainly care for those who want our care. Have no fear on that score. But will you blame me if for one I do not sit up on the nights in August worrying about the religious formalities due to a host of people who have so proudly disdained the offices of the Christian Church in life?

May I ask that the prominence of your article should bespeak an equal prominence for this reply.

Very truly yours,
E. VICARS STEVENSON.

Festival Was a Success.

The peach and ice cream festival held at Marconnier chapel, last night, was quite well attended and the treasury of the chapel will be benefitted to the extent of about $25. The threatening weather, however, kept away quite a number of persons.

MRS. BAKER FOLLOWS HUSBAND TO THE GRAVE

VENERABLE MINISTER'S WIDOW DIES IN 91ST YEAR.

Mrs. Cynthia M. Baker, widow of the late Rev. H. H. Baker, who at the time of his death in January last, was considered the oldest resident of Plainfield, died this morning, at her home on East Fifth street, aged ninety years. She had been in failing health, especially since the death of her husband, although like him, she retained her mental faculties until the end. She was a most estimable woman, possessing exceptional qualities, and she was loved and esteemed by a large host of friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Baker's maiden name was Cynthia M. Green. She was born at Berlin, New York, in 1817. It was while Mr. Baker was preaching at Berlin that he met his wife. They were married a year later. She was a great help to him in his ministry and literary work throughout his life and his death was a severe blow to her, from which she did not fully recover.

On August 22, 1906, Mr. and Mrs. Baker observed in a quiet way the seventieth anniversary of their marriage. At that time they were the recipients of many kind expressions of opinion and beautiful gifts. Mrs. Baker was a faithful and active member of the Seventh-day Baptist church, until her death prevented her attendance at the services.

The funeral service will be held from the late residence, 220 East Fifth street, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

DOWNTOWN CLUB HOWLS AGAINST ENDORSMENT

ELIZABETH REPUBLICANS STRONGLY AGAINST PERKINS.

At a large attended meeting of the Downtown Republican Club, of Elizabeth, last night, an effort on the part of one member to secure the endorsement of the club for Assemblyman Randolph Perkins met with such a storm of protest that a motion to that effect was withdrawn. Aside from the person who offered the motion not one present had a good work for Mr. Perkins.

It was the sense of the club that the renomination of Mr. Perkins would seriously interfere with the success of the ticket and would result in an Anti-Saloon party ticket. Speeches were made condemning the action of Mr. Perkins, which was characterized as antagonistic to the best interests of the party.

The endorsement of the club was given to Judge J. Franklin Fort for Governor, George T. Parrott for surrogate and John R. Moxon for the Assembly.

There was a rumor in Elizabeth today that Surrogate Parrott had decided to make a fight for renomination. Not much credence is placed in the report that Major King, director of the Board of Freeholders, would be a candidate for surrogate.

Asa D. Pope Is Nominated.

Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P., at its regular meeting, last night, nominated Asa D. Pope, of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., as a candidate for the office of Grand Outer Guard. The Grand Lodge officers are nominated by the various lodges in the State, but are elected by the past chancellors at their meeting in December. The result is made known at the meeting of the Grand Lodge held in Trenton on the third Wednesday in February. Once a man is elected to grand outer guard it generally follows that he goes through the Grand Lodge chairs.

First Shipment of Brick.

The first shipment of vitrified brick from the plant of the Pennsylvania Clay Company arrived here this morning and they are being distributed at convenient points on Park avenue. C. M. Meeker, the contractor, has everything in readiness to start the work, and it is planned to begin the brick-laying process on Park avenue at the corner of Front street.

Will Attend Shriners' Conclave.

William Jones, William Randolph, Joseph Dunham and Isaac Alexander will be among the Plainfielders who will attend the Imperial Conclave of the Mystic Shrine, colored, to be held at Richmond, Va., next week. They will accompany delegations which will leave in a special train from Jersey City on Tuesday, over the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Auto Storage Building.

Henry DeMott, of the borough, is planning to erect a large cement block building back of his Pearl street property, to be used for the storage of automobiles. The structure will be 75x100.

RAISE EXCISE LICENCES

Court Increase wholesalers' Fees to $250 and $300 Through County.

NOW TWO CLASSES

Low Rate in Places Under 3,000 Population and Latter in Other Cases—Atwater's Order.

Considerable surprise was occasioned this morning at a special session of the Court of Common Pleas in Elizabeth, when it was announced by Judge Atwater that the whole license fee in the county would be raised from the present fee of $100 to $250 and $300 according to the population in the towns, borought and cities in which a license is asked for. The action is a result of the recent agitation against the undesirable method employed in conducting the liquor business and is intended to weed out many objectionable places.

The order of the court is as follows:

"It is on this sixth day of September, 1907, ordered by the Court that from and after the date of this order and until further order of this court all licenses granted by the court for the sale of liquor in any quantity from one quart to five gallons, commonly known as wholesale license, shall be upon payment by the licensee of a license fee as follows:

"All townships, towns, borough or cities having by the census last preceding the granting of such license a population of not more than 3,000 a license fee of $250, and all towns, townships, boroughs, villages and all cities having by such census a population exceeding 3,000 and not exceeding 10,000 a license fee of $300." The order was signed by Judge Edward S. Atwater.

In connection with the order of the court there was also considered the applications of William J. Farrell, Lars Jensen, of Cranford and Otto Tiemann, of Roselle, for liquor licenses. Farrell's application had been before the court for some time and this morning the township committee and a number of prominent citizens appeared in court to protest against the granting of the application. Counsel for Farrell withdrew the application, and the court directed the prosecutor to take the matter before the Grand Jury. It is said that Farrell has been conducting his business in a questionable manner.

The applications of Jensen and Tiemann were granted, there being no protest or objections offered to them.

WARM WORDS ON HOT NIGHT AS TO SNOW.

Dripping Dunellen Councilmen Wrangle Over a Winter Ordinance, Mayor Breaking Tie.

Passing a snow ordinance while the thermometer registered close to the seventy-five degree point in the small and stuffy Council chambers resulted in a hot wrangle at the postponed meeting of the borough fathers of Dunellen. Mayor William Wyckoff introduced the ordinance which prescribes a $5 fine for failure to remove the snow from sidewalks during the winter season. After the introduction of the measure Borough Attorney Von Minden was called upon to explain the workings of the law.

Councilman Koons objected to the law after it was introduced, claiming that it was not applicable to boroughs but to cities. Mr. Koons became so excited and insisted on interrupting Attorney Von Minden so frequently, that Mayor Wyckoff was compelled to call him to order and finally issued an order that he remain in his seat. Councilman Churchill also objected to the measure, but was not as aggressive as Mr. Koons. When the matter was put to a vote a tie resulted, Councilmen Koons and Churchill voting in the negative, while Messrs. Starker and Richards voted in favor of the law. Mayor Wyckoff broke the tie by voting in favor of the ordinance. In an interview on the opposition of Churchill and Koons to the ordinance, Mayor Wyckoff said that these two councilmen opposed the measure because they never bothered to keep their sidewalks free of snow in past winters.

Trouble Over a Drunk.

Matthew Cuthbertson, arrested for drunkenness on Park avenue yesterday afternoon by Patrolman Saffron, was released by City Judge Runyon this morning under suspended sentence. Cuthbertson caused a lot of bother on the street. A citizen telephoned to police headquarters and another hunted up Saffron. The latter reached the scene before the patrol wagon, and the driver of the latter had something of a time hunting for the passanger he expected to find.

JERSEY'S SHARE OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Fiscal Year Total Was $6,876,160, Out of Country's $209,664,022 in Aggregate.

A preliminary report of the commissioner of internal revenue on the collection of internal revenue and the condition of the service has just been made public at Washington in advance of the commissioner's report.

The preliminary report shows that of the $209,664,022.85 collected during the last fiscal year from internal revenue, the grand total of $6,876,160.35 was collected in New Jersey, and that only eight States in the Union equaled or exceeded that State in their total collections. These States were, in their order: Illinois, New York, Indiana, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin and Missouri.

In the fifth New Jersey district Collector H. C. H. Herold collected $6,474,177.94; while in the first New Jersey district Collector Isaac Moffett collected $401,982.41.

The report also shows that during the year there has been a falling off or decrease of $96,937.68 in the amount paid by retail liquor dealers as special tax, as compared with the collections of the preceding year. As that tax is $25 for each dealer, it is fair to suppose that for some cause or other 3,877 saloons have gone out of business during the last fiscal year.

—George C. M. Smith, of Craig place, returned today from a five weeks' stay on the Shrewsbury river, and will be ready to resume instructions in music next week.

A Lesson for School Boys.

Question: How Much Can Your Parents Afford to Spend on Your Clothes?

A school boy's first lesson should be one in economy and he should be taught to practise economy in the selection and use of his clothing. He can better do this if he is taught the difference between worthy and unworthy fabrics and their wearing qualities as related to their cost, and he will have a better understanding of what his parents can afford to pay when he finds out what good clothes cost.

Take the boys around. Let them see the clothing offered in the different stores. Note its quality and its cost. Then let the boy decide what you ought to spend for his school clothes or his dress clothes.

We sell suits for school and dress ranging in price from $1.98 to $13.98.

At any price we name we believe we can give you more value than any other store in town. Decide that point for yourself thru investigation.

For $2.25—we can give the boy a neat new Double Breasted or Norfolk Suit of fancy cheviot and cassimere, in all sizes up to 17 years; suit that will equal any $3 suits you can find elsewhere.

For $3—we can give you Norfolk Suits with Knickerbocker Pants or double breasted coats with straight pants. For 75c additional we can give you either kind with both Knickerbocker or straight trousers in a good selection of new, dark mixtures. Russian and Sailor Suits are also included in the $3 lines, and there are all sizes up to 17 years.

For $4—you can have suits in Double Breasted or Norfolk styles in eight different models intended for boys who are especially hard on clothes—black thibets or fancy Scotch mixtures and cheviots and brownish cassimeres; 7 to 18 year sizes. These same suits with two pair of Knickerbockers, $5.

For $5—you will tog the boy in a handsome perfect fitting suit of blue serge and at least twenty different fancy mixtures with regular or bloomer trousers, including "Our Own" Boys' $5 Suits which cannot be surpassed at the price; 6 to 18 year sizes. These suits with two pair of knickerbockers $6.

For $7—we can sell you very dressy and distinctive suits of superior materials in all sizes from 3 to 18 years; particularly striking and novel Russian and Sailor Suits at these prices.

For $15—we sell suits particularly liked by High School boys or young fellows just starting off to college; modeled just like $25 and $30 suits; snappy, stylish, fashionable; perfect fitting; made of the smartest of the new woolens, including many novelties that the boys will be delighted with.

This is the only house in Newark making a specialty of suits with extra knickerbocker trousers running up in price to $13.98, and of the larger, fuller sizes for boys of 3 to 18 years.

We also carry suits for extra stout boys and suits with extra long pants, $5 to $22.

Summer Clothes.

Half price will buy anything in the remaining lots of Summer Suits for little fellows.

Particular attention is called to our straight pants at 50c and bloomer pants at 75c—here in drab corduroy, plain blue and cheviot, mixtures and cassimere, made with patent waistbands and taped seams.

The Millinery Department Has a Word to Say:

The work-room is crowding up pretty new fall Hats, designed by Miss Strohuber. She has seen all that is new from across the waters, having entree to the most exclusive Millinery importers in this country. And how near some of those charming hats are reproduced! One could hardly tell the original $75 hat from the very reasonable one made here, but then Miss Strohuber has that distinction—and you will see Hats here this fall such as Plainfield has not had before; and prices reasonable above all.

MR. STEVENSON'S LETTER.

Although no reference was made to either the Episcopal or Catholic churches in the news article of which he complains, space is gladly given to Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, rector of Grace Episcopal church, for his communication taking us to task for calling attention to the fact that the general absence of Protestant pastors in both city and borough during August caused much inconvenience to those who needed their services. If the clergyman will look on the title page of his prayer-book he will find it distinctly stated that the Episcopal church claims to be a part of the Catholic fold. As a minister of that faith he has been ordained to preach that it is not Protestant, much less Evangelical. Consequently it is not quite clear how he sees any reason to find fault with our statement that "all or practically all, the pastors of the evangelical churches have been in the habit of going on their vacations in August and the church people in town awoke to the fact last week that the city was virtually without a Protestant pastor."

We are sorry that we cannot share the sentiment of our contributor when he asks: "But will you blame me if for one I do not sit up in the nights in August worrying about the religious formalities due to a host of people who have so proudly disdained the offices of the Christian Church?" We certainly do, reverend sir, for the Master commanded that you go preach the Gospel to everyone. Such sacred offices as the funeral service and such important ministrations as consolation to the sick and dying are not mere "formalities." Taking it for granted that some may disdain the offices of the Church during life, when the soul has passed to life eternal and the body is ready for the tomb should not a minister be just as zealous? Can he not afford in such cases to repeat the words of the Saviour when he said "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do?"

"A MAN LIKE RIKER?"

His sudden appearance at Trenton, where he went presumably to have a heart-to-heart talk with Governor Stokes the other day, has led the Newark News to suspect that, in his own opinion, Congressman Charles N. Fowler, the famous absentee member of the National House of Representatives, may be a "man like Riker," for such has United States Senator Frank O. Briggs picked as the one to name for Governor.

That the Newark News knows just as well as his own constituents do what kind of a man Fowler is there can be no question. He's the kind of a man who continually absented himself when the roll was called in Congress; he's the kind of a man whom his constituents rebuked in the most severe way at the last election; he's the kind of a man that lost his own city when last running for office and he's the kind of a man that went down in crushing defeat in his own county, a stronghold of Republicanism, when a radical Democrat was his opponent.

We are glad to note nevertheless that our friend, the Congressman, has been aroused to a right sense of duty. In his edict issued through the columns of the New York Tribune, Charles Napoleon says that the Republican party should "comprehend public conscience and execute public will." It is quite probable that the voters of the Fifth district, which gave him a couple of hundred majority instead of the normal 5,000, convinced him of that fact. We are glad to see, we say, that he is awake, at last, but no one need any fear of his being nominated for Governor. He's not that kind of a man.

SECOND PLACE BATTLE.

Interest In Inter-City Contest Centers About Runners-Up.

The Inter-City League has one thing quite in common with the National League—the whole fight is for second place. Scotch Plains and Y. M. C. A. are tied for the position and each have two games to play. One game will be together, and each will play Bound Brook, so the chase after second honors is dead even.

Y. M. C. A. will play Bound Brook at Bound Brook tomorrow, and is due to win. The lowly Laurels—odd name for a combination that has seemed more like a citrus plant than any other thing growing out of the ground—won a game from Y. M. C. A. two weeks ago, which is their share for the rest of 1907 and part of next year. Scotch Plains has a harder proposition, going up against the league leaders on Crescent Oval. Clinton Avenue is playing to win just as hard as when the pennant was in doubt, and the somewhat jaded suburbanites will find work cut out for them when they face the gingery champions. The game is an exhibition affair.

"Roosevelt" at Shooters Island.

Passengers on the New Jersey Central trains between Plainfield and Jersey City can now enjoy a full view of the arctic exploration ship, "Roosevelt," commanded by Com. Peary. The ship is at Shooters Island in Newark Bay, where it has been for several months and can readily be distinguished by its three masts and large buff smoke stack. The hull is painted black with a white band around it and the ship can be singled out by the very high bows made especially so in order that the ship can ride the ice and crush it by its weight. As the season is too far advanced the ship will not start for the farthest north until next spring.

Last Dollar Excursion to Hopatcong.

The last of this season's dollar excursions to Lake Hopatcong via New Jersey Central will leave Plainfield at 9:51 a. m. on Sunday, September 8. The lake is more beautiful than ever.

OBITUARY.

Theodore McGarrah.

The funeral services of Theodore McGarrah, who died at his home on the Boulevard, Westfield, Wednesday morning, will be held from the late home at 4 o'clock, this afternoon. Rev. H. H. Guernsey, of the Congregational church, will officiate and the burial will be in Monroe county, N. Y., tomorrow. Mr. McGarrah was a resident of Westfield for seventeen years and was one of the most prominent citizens there. At one time he was a leader in the Democratic party, and for awhile edited a Democratic column in the Standard at that place. During Bryan's first campaign he joined the McKinley Gold Democratic Club and worked hard for McKinley's election. He was a close and warm friend of Grover Cleveland.

New Tea and Coffee Store.

The James VanDky Co. will open a branch tea and coffee store tomorrow at 127 West Front street. This company, starting with one store a few years ago, now has a system of fifty branches. The old-timers said that they could not sell tea without crockery or so-called gifts. They were wrong! The liberal patronage accorded them proves that the people want values—not gifts. On opening day they will presen to each purchaser a pencil box. See ad. in this issue.

Auto In River.

George Graham, a former resident here, who lives in Glasgow now, was one of the party travelling in a big red automobile that yesterday plunged from the Brooklyn ferryboat Maine, after accidentally starting in the slip, into the East River. William Nolan, the chauffeur, was carried with the machine, but he was rescued from the river. Mr. Graham was in Plainfield today, stopping at the Kensington Hotel.

Want Building Line Fixed.

J. Fred MacDonald, Charles H. Hand and other residents of Watchung avenue, between Front and Third streets, have drafted a petition to be sent to the Common Council asking that the building line on that thoroughfare be established 14½ feet from the curb line. This action is taken that there may be no future trouble in case new buildings are erected.

Funeral of Norman Leech.

The funeral service of Norman Leech, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Leech, was held this morning at 10:30 o'clock from the residence of the grandmother, Mrs. M. E. Kitchell, 337 Watchung avenue. Rev. Phil. A. Parsons, of the Christian church, officiated. The burial was in the cemetery at South Plainfield.

Only $1 to West Point.

On Sunday, Sept. 8, the New Jersey Central will have an excursion up the Hudson to West Point and Newburgh via the palatial steamer Sandy Hook. Train leaves Plainfield at 8:52 a. m., and tickets are $1.

Big Casting.

A thirty-ton table for a planing machine was cast at the Pond Works yesterday. It was the biggest cast in some time. The table will not be cool enough to handle until nine days have passed.

HAIR COMING OUT?

Perhaps dandruff troubles you a little, too.

KEPT WEDDING A SECRET.

Orange Couple's Marriage Made Known Three Months Later.

Announcement was made yesterday at Orange of the marriage on June 9 last of Miss Bessie May Freshour, of Ogden street, and Albert J. Long, of Taylor street, Orange. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. Alan Russel, curate of St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Parish, New York.

No objections had been made to the match, but the young people decided to keep the marriage a secret until later in the fall, when they expect to go to housekeeping. Since the wedding the bride has been spending the summer at Lake Sunapee, N. H., and Mr. Long has lived with his parents in Orange.

That Mr. Long was already married was not suspected until Labor Day, when the Long family had a reunion and outing at Lake Hopateong. When all the guests had gathered for the picnic luncheon, the bridegroom announced the wedding.

He will leave for Lake Sunapee in a few days and, following a wedding tour, Mr. and Mrs. Long will make their home in Orange.

NEW JERSEY GAME LAWS OUT.

Only One Change Over Those of 1906—Woodcock Law Not Passed.

The New Jersey fish and game laws, which have just been printed, show only one change over the laws of 1906. This change is in reference to fishing through the ice in the month of January, which is prohibited, although the law allowing pike and pickerel to be taken in January appears on the statutes. Apparently these fish may be taken in January should there be no ice on the waters.

The July woodcock law was not passed, and these birds may be taken in that month. The various fish and game protective associations which fought for these changes are disappointed at the result.

The law abolishing the present Fish and Game Commission, which passed the Senate, has never been signed by the Governor. Governor Stokes said yesterday that he has not even seen the bill.

Waldorf Annex Opens Tonight.

Henry Windham's new restaurant, annex to the Waldorf Hotel, will be opened tonight, when a brass band will discourse a popular program. This restaurant, which adjoins the hotel on West Front street, has been handsomely fitted up with all the latest equipment and affords an ideal place for men and women to dine.

No Court Today.

There was no session of the Somerset County Courts in Somerville this morning. Judge Louis H. Schenck left yesterday to spend a week's vacation in Northern New York State, and he decided before leaving not to get another Judge to sit in his place, because no matters of importance were pending.

Enormous Production of Cement.

Washington, Sept. 6.—The production of cement in 1906 amounted to the enormous total of 51,000,445 barrels, valued at $55,302,277, exceeding by 10,897,137 barrels in quantity, and $18,870,744 in value the production for 1905, which has been the banner year.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

"A Modern Lady Godiva," the play which Amelia Bingham, supported by a clever company, will bring to the New Plainfield theatre next Saturday afternoon and night, is said to be highly dramatic and to give Miss Bingham the best opportunities she ever has had. It was written especially for her by Frederick F. Schrader and Lloyd M. Bingham.

Miss Alberta Gallatin, who will appear September 10 in this city as the star of Managers Eldredge & Meakin's mammoth production of "Judith of the Plains," is a Virginian. Her father was the celebrated Confederate general, Albert Gallatin Jenkins, whose name is still held in loving reverence among the veterans of the Shenandoah Valley. General Jenkins was a warm personal friend of Fitzhugh Lee.

While it is not unusual to hear of a young woman obtaining sudden promotion on the stage, especially from the chorus to the position of star, the retro-active stunt of "from star to chorus" had never yet been accomplished until Claudia Rogers, who will come to the New Plainfield, September 11, with Marie Cahill in "Marrying Mary," stopped playing Juliet in the South and jumped to New York to take her place in the "long skirted" group of singers and dancers who fill up the stage for Miss Cahill. She made the change for the sake of experience.

William Collier, who comes to the New Plainfield theatre on September 13, in his three-act farce, "Caught In the Rain," comes of a theatrical family. Edmund Collier, his father, was a tragedian, and William's mother, whose stage name was Henrietta Engel, was a dancer. J. W. Collier, of Shook & Collier, who had the Union Square theatre, in New York, was his uncle. His sister, Helena Collier, is now playing the part of the widow in his "Caught in the Rain" company. He has cousins galore in the profession. At an early age the present star was a callboy in Augustin Dalys' famous company.

At the New Plainfield theatre September 12, Hap Ward will be seen in his musical farce comedy hit of last season, "Not Yet But Soon." The promise is made that the offering is equal to anything in which he has ever been seen here in point of sightly stage environment and laughing possibilities. E. D. Stair promises an unusually meritorious production and sightly series of stage pictures.

BOB HAMPTON of PLACER

By RANDALL PARRISH AUTHOR OF "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING" "MY LADY OF THE NORTH" "HISTORIC ILLINOIS" ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY A. C. McCLURG & CO.

"ain't a young lady!"

"No; well, you're going to be if I have my way, and I don't believe the sort of a gent described would be very apt to help you much in getting there."

"You ain't all that."

"Well, perhaps not. Like an amateur artist, madam may have laid the colors on a little thick. But I am no winged angel, Kid, nor exactly a model for you to copy after. I reckon you better stick to the woman and cut me."

She did not answer, yet he read an unchanged purpose in her eyes, and his own decision strengthened. Some instinct led him to do the right thing; he drew forth the locket from beneath the folds of her dress, holding it open to the light. He noticed now a name engraven on the gold case, and bent lower to decipher the delicate lettering.

"Was her name Naida?" he questioned, sharply. "It is an uncommon word."

"Yes."

Their eyes met, and those of both had perceptibly softened.

"Naida," his lips dwelt upon the peculiar name as though he loved the sound. "I want you to listen to me, child. I sincerely wish I might keep you here with me, but I can't. You are more to me than you dream, but it would not be right for me thus deliberately to sacrifice your whole future to my pleasure. I possess nothing to offer you,—no home, no friends, no reputation. Practically I am an outlaw, existing by my wits, disreputable in the eyes of those who are worthy to live in the world. She, who was your mother, would never wish you to remain with me. She would say I did right in giving you up into the care of a good woman. Naida, look on that face in the locket, your mother's face. It is sweet, pure, beautiful, the face of a good, true woman. Living or dead, it must be the prayer of those lips that you become a good woman also. She should lead you, not I, for I am unworthy. For her sake, and in her name, I ask you to go back to Mrs. Herndon."

He could perceive the gathering tears in her eyes, and his hand closed tightly about her own. It was not one soul alone that struggled.

"You will go?"

"O Bob, I wish you wasn't a gambler!"

A moment he remained silent. "But unfortunately I am," he admitted, soberly, "and it is best for you to go back. Won't you?"

Her gaze was fastened upon the open locket, the fair face pictured there smiling up at her as though in pleading also.

"You truly think she would wish it?"

"I know she would."

The girl gave utterance to a quick, startled breath, as if the vision frightened her. "Then I will go," she said, her voice a mere whisper, "I will go."

He led her down the steps, out into the jostling crowd below, as if she had been some fairy princess. Her locket hung dangling, and he slipped it back into its place and drew her slender form yet closer against his own, as they stepped forth into the black, deserted road. Halfway up the gloomy ravine they met a man and woman coming along the narrow path. Hampton drew her aside out of their way, then spoke coldly.

"Mrs. Herndon, were you seeking your lost charge? I have her here."

The two passing figures halted, peering through the darkness.

"I was not seeking her," she returned, icily. "I have no desire to cultivate the particular friends of Mr. Hampton."

"So I have understood, and consequently relinquish here and now all claims upon Miss Gillis. She has informed me of your flattering opinion regarding me, and I have indorsed it as being mainly true to life. Do I state this fairly, Naida?"

"I have come back," she faltered, fingering the chain at her throat, "I have come back."

"Without Bob Hampton?"

The girl glanced uneasily toward him, but he stood motionless in the gloom.

"Yes—I—I suppose I must."

Hampton rested his hand softly upon her shoulder, his fingers trembling, although his voice remained coldly deliberate.

"I trust this is entirely satisfactory, Mrs. Herndon," he said. "I can assure you I know absolutely nothing regarding her purpose of coming to me tonight. I realize quite clearly my own deficiencies, and pledge myself hereafter not to interfere with you in any way. You accept the trust, I believe?"

She gave utterance to a deep sigh of resignation. "It comes to me clearly as a Christian duty," she acknowledged, doubtfully, "and I suppose I must take up my cross; but—"

"But you have doubts," he interrupted. "Well, I have none, for I have greater faith in the girl, and—perhaps in God. Good-night, Naida."

He bowed above the hand the girl gave him in the darkness, and ever after she believed he bent lower, and pressed his lips upon it. The next moment the black night had closed him out, and she stood there, half frightened at she knew not what, on the threshold of her new life.

An Illustration

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.,—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

"CENTRAL PARK"

Was——Is——Will Be

IT WAS, only about a year ago, just a pretty farm.

IT IS to day the finest building site in Plainfield, with broad avenues macadamized their entire width, concrete curb, sidewalks, trees, gas, electric light, in fact all improvements. Nearly $100,000 expended in new and handsome dwellings, now ready for the market.

WHAT IT WILL BE we hardly dare predict, with contracts out for even more extensive improvements and twelve more handsome residences.

Central Park is that beautifully situated tract bounded by Park, Prospect, Hillside and Thornton Avenues.

Lots selling rapidly—Prices very low—Great investment or speculative opportunities.

DIAMOND DUST.

The injury to Collins, of the Philadelphia Athletics, which may keep him out of the game for the rest of the season, may result in bringing Oldring in from the outfield. "Rube" has been playing a star game this season.

The Brooklyn Nationals are about the most troublesome team in that league for the Giants to meet. The Trolley Dodgers whitewashed McGraw's men on Tuesday and in the first game the Giants blanked Brooklyn.

It would be well for the management of the Clinton Avenues to arrange to hold Clifford Randolph for their pitching staff next year. His work this season shows that by all odds he has been the best among the local twirlers.

Taylor Mehaffey, of Park avenue, has returned from the Adirondacks, where he has been playing baseball all summer with a Princeton College team. Taylor made good all right and was among the most popular players in that summer resort. Another Plainfielder there was Heyniger, the famous Princeton twirler.

It is the hope of the fans that Walter Nelson will play in Plainfield next season and no time should be lost in getting his consent to come here. He is one of the most popular players in this section of the State.

Mal Eason, formerly a National League pitcher, has been appointed an umpire in the Eastern League.

"Billy" Lauder, at one time the star third sacker on the New York Nationals, and for awhile with the Plainfield team, is now with the Uniontown, Pa., team.

George Wiltse never gets much praise on the sporting page, but nevertheless he is rated as one of the best southpaws in the profession just the same. He has never had a losing record since he joined the big league, five years ago.

Rube Waddell has thus far struck out 198 men this season, and unless he gets too gay he will probably break the strike-out record.

Bender, the Indian pitcher with the Philadelphia Athletics, still continues to be the star boxman in the American League. On Wednesday he allowed the Highlanders but five measley hits and fanned ten batsmen.

McGraw has settled all doubting minds by making a statement that he will be the manager of the Giants next season and will try to land the team in first place.

Manager Billy Murray, of the Philadelphia Nationals, is on the outs with his many Jersey City friends, because he allowed Pitcher Lake to go with the Highlanders. Lake is rated a wonder and Murray wanted to land him with the Phillies.

While Bill Dahlen, of the Giants, almost led the National League in the number of home runs last season, he has failed to make a single one this year.

It is reported that Joe Kelley will manage the Boston Nationals next season and that Fred Tenney will wear a Pittsburg uniform.

GOLF.

Frank O. Reinhart and "Marty" O'Loughlin will go to Inwood, L. I., on Sunday, September 15, where they will play a match with Ed. Ericksen, the home "pro" and the best amateur of the club.

The damage to the Plainfield Country Club caused by the fire on Sunday, has been repaired.

Rev. H. K. Carroll has returned from his vacation and is again a familiar figure at the Park Golf Club; also Rev. C. L. Goodrich and Rev. J. O. McKelvey.

Although one of the new players at the Park Golf Club, W. V. Byard is making a good record. Scarcely a week passes but that he does not get at least one point.

With the return of the best players to the Plainfield Country Club it is expected that there will be an attempt to smash existing records.

Although more experienced and generally recognized as much the stronger player, Lester Glenney was kept busy on Saturday beating his younger brother, Will Glenney, in the first round for the Scratch cup.

The Saturday night dinner-dances at the Plainfield Country Club continue to be as popular as ever and now that the members are flocking home from their vacation, they will be more largely attended.

Play for the Governor's cup at the Westfield Golf Club continues with increasing interest. Each week there is a large field out competing for this coveted trophy.

—Lawrence Scheelein has removed from Prospect place to Somerset street, above Codington avenue.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss will occupy his pulpit at the First Baptist church, Sunday morning and night.

The members of the choir of the First Baptist church will resume their work on Sunday, September 15.

The vested choir of the First M. E. church will resume its place in the regular services on Sunday, under the direction of J. Edmund Skiff.

The new chairs for the Sunday-school room of the First Baptist church, replacing the old wooden benches, have been purchased and the change will be made soon.

The partitions for the new addition at Faith chapel have arrived and will be put in position so that the new part can be used on Sunday for the first by the Sunday-school.

Preparatory services will be held at the Congregational church tonight and the regular communion services on Sunday morning. Rev. C. L. Goodrich, the pastor, will be in charge.

CITY JOTTINGS.

—Cantaloups are dainty eating. Chill them thoroughly. Neuman Bros. have the finest kinds.

—M. & A. Tepper, successors to I. H. Boehm in the dry goods business, were elected members of the Board of Trade last night.

—John Whitenack, night ticket agent at the North Avenue station of the New Jersey Central, has removed from Grandview avenue to 35 Prospect place, the borough.

OUGHT TO BE HANGED.

Judge Says He'd Help to String Up Child's Assaulter.

"You ought to be hanged. Any man who will assault a child ought to be strung up. And I would be one of the first to help," Acting Judge Robert Miller said yesterday in the Second Criminal Court at Jersey City, to Ballertino Tomba, who narrowly escaped lynching Wednesday night at the hands of a crowd of workmen who saw him trying to carry a child into a vacant lot on Suydam avenue, Jersey City. A policeman rescued the man after he had been severely beaten by the crowd.

The child who alleges she was attacked by Tomba is Alma Schaefer, nine years old, of No. 224 Suydam avenue. Tomba is a railroad laborer, twenty-four year old, whose house is at No. 308 Third street, Jersey City.

Tomba had his wounds dressed at a hospital and was then locked up in the Communipaw Avenue Station. After expressing his opinion of the prisoner Judge Miller held the man in $2,000 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Again Arc Lights.

A. E. Force kept the arc light question alive at the Board of Trade meeting last night. He asked what had been done to bring the subject to some definite shape, and appeared put out to learn that the usual "progress" was all that could be reported. It was time something was done to bring the merchants to active work on the improvement, he said.

Stirs Up Contractor.

Dunellen's Council has gotten after a dilatory contractor with a sharp stick. It was voted Wednesday night to notify George Huff, who was awarded the job of grading part of Washington avenue, that the work must be completed by October 1 or the borough would finish it.

Painful Vacation Ends.

Miss Florence Dickerson, of East Second street, is confined to her room with a sprained ankle, received as she was hurrying to catch a homeward train at Lebanon, after a pleasant vacation. She fell in alighting from a hack, and sprained her ankle badly.

Prisoners Get Off Easy.

Frank Larry, arrested by Chief Marshal Weiss, and Allen Mack, arrested by Marshal Pope, were arraigned before Recorder Dolliver in the Borough Court, last night, charged with being drunk and disorderly. Sentence was suspended in each case.

Fuller—Collins.

Miss Adelaide Collins and Arthur Fuller, both well known in Dunellen and New Market, were married this week in Bayonne. Mr. Fuller formerly lived in Dunellen. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Broshart, of Dunellen, attended the wedding, and played the march.

Parochial School Opens Monday.

St. Mary's Parochial School will reopen Monday for the fall and winter term. About $500 has been expected in making many improvements about the school, a number of changes having been made in the sanitary arrangements.

POLITICS WARMING UP

Both Parties Ready for the Coming Primaries in Somerset.

ALL PETITIONS FILED

Senator Frelinghuysen Is One of the Candidates on the Republican Ticket for Delegate to State Convention.

Bridgewater Township, Somerset county, is ready for the approaching primaries and both of the two big political parties have filed petitions for candidates for the various township offices and for delegates to the State and county conventions. The delegates to the State Convention from Bridgewater will be:

Republican, Charles H. Bateman, Ezra H. Weldon, Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, William H. Cawley, H. W. Reusswig, William H. H. Wyckoff, J. Albert Schneider. Democratic, John A. Frech, Jacob Shurts, Cornelius Creeden, Clarence Garretson, Frederick C. Bartle.

County Convention—Republican, Azariah M. Beekman, W. F. Garretson, Cochran Kane, James R. Brown, Reuben J. Southwick, George A. Dilts, Norman Burscher, John B. Osbourn, Thomas G. Winsor, Walter H. Smith, Finley P. Wyckoff, Alvah C. Vliet, James D. Richardson; Democratic, Charles Schwed, Thomas J. Ryan, Michael Flaherty, William J. Keys, Daniel Burns, Newton O. Dunster, Thomas Egan, John Slattery, Phillip P. Hckey, Jacob Glaser.

For township committee (Republican) there is a contest on for the nomination in the First ward between Christopher Ehnt and John Ramsey, and in the Second ward between William Harris and Jacob C. Huff. Philip W. Mundy seeks the candidacy in the Third Ward, and Jacob K. Brokaw for township committe-at-large. Henry W. Koch is the Republican candidate for nomination for constable.

The Democrats are not seeking the minor offices. John Slattery is out for township committee in the Second ward.

The following are the Democrats who will be members of the county executive committee: First district, William E. Maxwell; second, Edward P. O'Donnell; third, Daniel Reynolds; fourth, Michael W. Scully; fifth, George v. Liebold; sixth, John B. Thum.

The prospect of a warm campaign in Somerset county this fall is becoming brighter every day. The Republican and Democratic parties both feel confident of victory, and are determined to wage a hot fight for the candidates to be named at the respective conventions.

The county will elect a member of Assembly, a Sheriff and a Surrogate, with possibly a Coroner or so. In the Republican party Assemblyman William W. Smalley of Bound Brook, is practically sure of the candidacy. The habit of sending the member back for a second term seems to stick closely to Somerset, and it is conceded he is likely to be the candidate on the Republican ticket.

Possible candidates for the Democratic side are former Assemblyman Samuel S. Swackhamer, of North Plainfield, and Frederick C. Sutro, of Bernards. The latter is a New Yorker who has a fine country residence in Somerset.

Among the Republicans mentioned for Sheriff are Charles Sebring, of Green Brook; David Buist, of Bernards, and Ellsworth Brokaw, of Branchburg. The Democrats are considering Frank T. Ross, formerly assessor in Bridgewater township; Thomas E. Gibson, the member of Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders and Franklin township, and A. V. D. Polhemus, also of Franklin.

The Republicans mentioned for Surrogate are the present Sheriff, Edward E. Cooper, and Tax Collector George F. Brown, Borough Clerk Frank Rowley and Dr. J. H. Cooley, of North Plainfield. It is not known whether or not Mr. Cooper would accept. The others are said to be in a receptive mood. For the Democrats the present incumbent, William J. De Mund, seems to be the leading candidate for nomination, with former Sheriff Calvin D. McMurtry also in the contest.

Bedminster, Branchburg and Hillsborough townships and North Plainfield borough will elect each a representative to the Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders. Contests are on in all excepting Branchburg, where Henry W. Baird (Republican) is the only one who has filed a petition. He is the present director of the board and will no doubt be re-elected a member of that body.

Rev. Phil. Parsons Back.

Rev. Phil. A. Parsons has returned frmo his vacation and regular services will be resumed at the Christian church, Grove street, tomorrow. Mr. Parsons was at Hamilton, O., his home.

PERKINS AGAIN PASSES UP DEBATING CHALLENGE

Y. M. C. A. HALL LIT UP IN VAIN BY HOPEFUL OPTIONISTS.

Assemblyman Perkins failed again to regard a Local Option challenge to debate, last night. Professor William M. Burke, who urgently dared the campaigning assemblyman to meet him for an exchange of shafts at Y. M. C. A. Hall, waited in vain for the coming of the Westfield solon. Mr. Perkins didn't even send his regrets.

The Y. M. C. A. Hall was all lit up, ready for the meeting at 8 o'clock. The local optionists waited until 8:15, and then turned out the lights. It was a question whether there would have been a crowd to hear the debate had it taken place. There were no signs of an excited, or even interested, populace about the doors at any time.

As he had announced he would do, Prof. Burke held an open-air meeting before the North Avenue station in place of the debate. There was not much of a crowd, and the trains made oratory difficult, but the Professor told with energy what the local optionists thought of Perkins and of his record. Perkins, the speaker declared, represented not the people but the worst bosses in the State. More particularly, he had followed a certain boss, whose name it was unnecessary to give. Perkins' antagonism to the organization was a forced affair, Prof. Burke said. The organization kicked him out, and to get the nomination he had to be against it.

After finishing Prof. Burke asked for opinions from his hearers and got some. One man said Perkins would get no vote of his and another positive citizen declared he'd have nothing to do with a man who ran with both hares and hounds.

BOROUGH FATHERS' TALK B'LD'G LINE ORDINANCE

ALSO DISCUSS CURB ORDINANCE BUT NOTHING IS DONE.

The question of establishing building lines in North Plainfield was discussed at some length at the September meeting of the Borough Council, last night. It was brought up by Mr. Smith, who stated that a property-owner on Duer street had spoken to him concerning such a line on that thoroughfare. He had heard that a party intended erecting a new building and putting it close to the sidewalk.

This led to a general discussion of the advisability of establishing building lines, but Borough Counsel Reed did not encourage the innovation, explaining that it would be necessary to get the signatures of all interested property-owners on any street to establish the line, and this, he said, would result in no end of work. Mr. Reed and the Mayor argued the matter, the latter taking the view that it would be for the best interests of the borough to have such lines established.

The discussion resulted in one concerning the wisdom of having a curb ordinance. Mr. VanWinkle urged it, but Mr. Reed said that while it might be a good thing, there was no law compelling one for the reason that the average population of boroughs in the State is under 500 and the inhabitants do not want to be forced to make such improvement. It was suggested that the street committee and the property-owners get together and form some agreement about curbing and establishing building lines and this will probably be done.

Attention, Mr. Gavett.

It is now considered over a month since C. M. Meeker received among other contracts the one to macadamize West End avenue, between Front street and the brook, but in that time but little has been accomplished. A quantity of dirt has been dumped there and recently several loads of old brick from the Cadmus Mill has been put on the street in an effort to bring it up to grade. The thoroughfare is in a disgraceful condition and in some respects dangerous, especially at night. The property-owners are indignant over the slow progress made and believe that it is time that the contract was resumed and hastened toward completion.

Y. M. C. A. Eleven Possible.

There is a possibility that the Y. M. C. A. will have a football team this year. Several of the pigskin enthusiasts among the members held an informal meeting with Physical Director Listman last night, and the prospects for the organization of an eleven looked bright after they had talked matters over. A general meeting will be called some night next week.

BOROUGH FATHERS' WORK

North Plainfield Council Transacts Minor Business and Plans for Sewer Opinion.

MR. REED TO FILE IT

Monthly Reports are Received—Property Owners to Pay Share of Street Improvement.

There was little business of importance to engage the attention of the Borough Council at the September meeting, last night. Mayor Smalley and all the members, excepting Mr. Krewson, were present, and the session lasted less than an hour.

The Council decided to adjourn to Friday night, September 20, to take some action regarding the opening of Watchung avenue and to also receive a report from Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed on the sanitary sewer matter.

The report of the treasurer was as follows:

Taxes and interest, $291.91; bills payable by note, $1,000; recorder, fines, $32; chief, dogs, $3; clerk, licenses, $32.50; cleaning off snow, last winter's account, sixty cents; error in account, one cent, total, $1,360.02; balance, August 1, 1907, $22,808.89; total receipts, $3,640.91; total disbursements, $3,543.64; balance on hand, $97.27.

C. E. Murray, who has erected a new house on Willow avenue, asked the Council for information as to how he might secure the proper number for his residence. The matter was referred to the street committee. It was afterward explained that every fifty feet of street is numbered in the borough and that the odd numbers are on the south-side of the street. The discussion brought out the fact that the residents of the borough do not live up to the ordinance providing for house numbering.

Recorder Charles M. Dolliver reported that during July there were nineteen arrests and $59 was collected in fines. During August there were twenty-two arrests and $34 in fines was collected.

There was some discussion over a laundry bill for $15.60, covering the past six months. Mayor Smalley requested Clerk Rowley to inform the proprietor of the laundry to render his bill monthly.

The use of Plainfield's steam roller in the borough for three days was explained by Mayor Smalley. He said that some repair work was needed on Somerset street and it was believed to be economy to engage the roller with a man to run it at $10 per day, in preference to hiring a horse roller.

The matter of sending bills to property-owners on Giraud avenue for their share of the macadam work, and also to those on Somerset street for their proportionate share of the expense of laying Hassam pavement, was urged by Mr. Smalley. He requested Mr. Waldron, chairman of the street committee, to attend to this matter at once; also to be careful how he expended the street funds, as the appropriation might be exceeded and there would be nothing left to care for the streets during the winter.

From the Giraud avenue macadamizing word there is due the borough $25 from George F. White; $12.50 from Samuel Townsend and a like amount from Judd Stewart. The Public Service Corporation stands one-third of the expense for the Hassam pavement on Somerset street, while the property-owners and the borough assume the other two-thirds. The cost was about $1 per running foot.

Upon the recommendation of Chairman Smith, of the fire committee, Mayor Smalley appointed Elvin Smalley a lieutenant and driver in the fire department to succeed Lieut. Emmons, resigned, and William Gaub was appointed tillerman. The appointments were confirmed.

It was reported by Mr. Smith that something would have to be done with the cesspools back of fire headquarters. It had been learned that blind drains were not a success and some other system must be adopted.

On motion of Mr. Waldron, the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company was given permission to extend its underground conduits through Lincoln place.

For the purpose of meeting the current claims, Mr. McGee offered a resolution, which was adopted, authorizing the borrowing of $4,500 from any corporation or individual.

Escape Extradition.

Steven Katyo and Joseph Katyo, arrested a month ago on a complaint made in Phoenixville, Pa., charging assault and who were held for 30 days in $200 bail to await extradition, were discharged from bonds this morning by Judge Runyon. The Phoenixville authorities made no effort to have them extradited. W. L. Hetfield, Jr., and F. J. Blatz represented the prisoners.

ACKERMAN IN THE RACE

This Time, However, He's on Biggest Steamship Which Will Try for Record.

LUSITANIA VS LUCANIA

Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman Will Make Flying Return Trip on Greatest Craft That Ever Crossed Ocean.

Among the passengers sailing this afternoon on the Lustiania from England are State Senator and Mrs. Ernest R. Ackerman, Mrs. Potter Palmer, Robert R. Potter George Peabody, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet, Richard Croker, Jr., Mrs. Croker, Miss Croker, W. P. Thompson, and Robert Balfour.

The voyage promises plenty of excitement, in view of the race with the Lucania, which for so long has held the record not only as the Cunard's fastest boat, but as the fastest of all British ships. The Lusitania and the Lucania were about two miles from each other in the Mersey at Liverpool last night. Extraordinary efforts have been put forth on both ships the last few days, and since the middle of the week work has been going on night and day.

The two great ships are commanded by two of the finest captains in the service, Capt. Watt, of the Lusitana and Capt. Barr of the Lucania. Each will know how to get every ounce out of his vessel. They are quiet mannered, reticent men, with closed lips and steady eyes, men who will make the great race notable. Incidentally they deny it is a race, and the engine room staffs are not talking.

At 4:30 o'clock this afternoon the Lucania leaves Prince's landing stage for New York, and at 7 o'clock the Lusitania will leave and the race will have started, but there will be no grip in the contest till after both boats have called at Queenstown and started in earnest across the Atlantic. The Lusitania will wait for the Lucania to clear away from Queenstown before she leaves. Then the army of the engine room staff of each ship will go to work in grim earnest.

One point in favor of the Lucania is that her stokehold and engine room crews know what their ship can do and how to make her do it. They number 221 men, and the Lusitania's rival battalion numbers 396. They will have to handle about 1,000 tons of coal daily.

English pride is running high, as it is confidently expected that the Lusitania will break the transatlantic record now held by the Germans. The whole accommodation in all classes, both in the Lucania and the Lusitania, has been booked. The former has on board 380 first and 360 second saloon passengers, and the latter 480 first and 495 second saloon passengers. Special police arrangements have been made to cope with the record crowd expected to assemble to witness the start.

GEORGE P. DUPEE'S BODY PLACED IN THE TOMB

FUNERAL SERVICE OF MUCH ESTEEMED BOROUGHITE TODAY.

The funeral service of George P. Dupee was held at 3 o'clock this afternoon from the late home on Rockview avenue, and was largely attended by relatives and friends, including many former business associates of Mr. Dupee. Rev. George A. Warner, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, of which Mr. Dupee was the senior warden for twenty years, officiated.

There was a beautiful display of floral tributes from relatives and friends; also from the various societies in the Church of the Holy Cross, with which Mr. Dupee was so closely identified. Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., of which he was a member, sent a floral tribute, and a large delegation from the lodge attended the service.

The burial was in Hillside cemetery and the pall-bearers were Edward J. Waring, Henry A. McGee, Augustus VanDeventer, Henry Phillips, A. E. Faber and J. C. Peck.

Another Dark Horse?

It is reported on good authority in Elizabeth that Benjamin King, of Clark township, director of the Union county Board of Freeholders, is quietly working for the surrogate nomination. He has not formally announced his candidacy, but is expected to do so in a few days. George T. Parrot, of Elizabeth, the present incumbent, is out for a renomination but it is declared by his friends that if King comes out for the job, he will quit in favor of some strong candidate from Elizabeth.

POLICE SEEKING CLAASSEN

Park Avenue Barber Charged With Embezzling from V. W. Nash.

WENT AWAY THURSDAY

Wrote to Mr. Narsh That He Would Work Off Indebtedness or Commit Suicide—Not Likely to Die.

The police have a warrant for the arrest of William A. Claassen, of Liberty street, a barber who conducted his business at 207 Park avenue, who disappeared on Thursday. The warrant was sworn out by V. W. Nash, Sr., as whose agent he had acted in the coal business. It is alleged that Claassen has $187 which he collected for Mr. Nash for which no accounting has been made.

Mr. Nash had an office in the Claassen shop, where orders were left and customers in this district of the city could pay bills. Claassen was authorized to accept the payments and to give receipts. Money belonging to Mr. Nash accumulated in Claassen's hands, the coal man alleges, until there was $187 due Claassen was pressed for settlement, and he agreed to pay, to V. W. Nash, Jr., who is his father's lawyer, on Thursday.

On Thursday morning Claassen opened the shop as usual. A little while after that he went out, leaving his assistant in charge. He hasn't been to the place since.

Not long after he left the shop, Mr. Nash received a letter from him. He acknowledged his indebtedness, and expressed gratitude for what Mr. Narsh had done for him. There were two things for him to do, he wrote. Work and pay what he owed or kill himself. The possibility of his putting the alternative into effect was lessened by the closing paragraph of the letter in which he promised to work off the indebtedness.

Mr. Nash swore out the warrant that day. Up to this afternoon the police had been unable to get trace of Claassen. He is married and has a grown son. He is a prominent member of the Gesang and Turn Verein, and belongs to Columbia Lodge, A. O. U. W.

Claassen's departure left something of a tangle of claims in the shop. He conducted baths in connection with barbering, and two mortgages were on the bathroom fixtures. A first mortgage is held by the New York concern from whom they were bought and William Young, who conducted a cigar stand in the shop, holds the second. Young offered to conduct the shop, and W. L. Hetfield, Jr., representing him, and J. H. VanWinkle & Son, for the first mortgagees, agreed today to turn over the fixtures to him.

Treat for Theatre-Goers.

"The Lion and the Mouse" will return to Plainfield on Monday evening, Sept. 16, for one performance at the New Plainfield theatre. The coming engagement is of especial note for the reason that Henry B. Harris is sending here this time the original Lyceum theatre company which appeared in New York over 400 times. Edmund Breese will be the John Burkett Ryder and Gertrude Coghlan, a daughter of Charles Coghlan, author of "The Royal Box," will assume the role of Shirley Rossmore. A capable supporting cast including all of the members of the original company is promised. F. V. Bruner was here today arranging for the Plainfield engagement.

Appropriation About Gone.

The Shade Tree Commission, comprising Elliot T. Barrows, Miles Roberts and City Engineer A. J. Gavett has about exhausted its appropriation for the spraying of trees. There is about $100 left in the treasury. The work has been carried on during the summer with excellent results and will be incalcuable in preserving hundreds of the best shade trees in the city. The commission is planning a campaign of education in an effort to place Plainfield in the front rank of cities possession desirable shade trees.

Delightful Automobile Trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward White, of this city, returned yesterday after a delightful summer vacation in the New England States. They made the journey in their automobile, traveling through Connecticut, Vermont, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine, covering several thousand miles. Notwithstanding the great distance Mr. White did not experience a puncture of an auto tire or the least bit of trouble.

Tillman Not on Duty.

RUNAWAY HORSE DID WHOLE LOT OF DAMAGE

BUT WHEN STOPPED AT LAST, ANIMAL WAS NOT HURT.

A horse drawing a one-seat runabout, owned by Mrs. Alice Sanford, of New Market, ran through Front street, this morning, at a time when that thoroughfare was congested with traffic.

Something frightened the animal and he started at breakneck speed east toward Park avenue, colliding with one owned by Mrs. Oscar Zugbaum, Sr., of Clinton avenue. The rear wheels of her wagon were wrecked, but the animal darted on dragging in and around other vehicles until it reached police headquarters. There it hooked up with an other light rig and in the tangle succeeded in breaking away from the runabout taking the shafts along. The other rig was not damaged.

Continuing its mad race the horse made a bolt for the sidewalk in front of the Woodhull & Martin building, where it crashed into one of the show cases, completely wrecking it. Felix Chargois, who just resigned as a member of the police department caught the infuriated animal before it could do any further damage. Roundsman Higgins took charge of the horse and placed him in George Cole's stables. He was uninjured and was able to be driven home later.

The lone occupant of the runaway rig was a pet dog. He was thrown out, but afterward jumped on the seat and refused to move.

William Maxwell, the driver, who had been left at the postoffice, ran through Front street in search of his rig. Just as he reached the office of the Public Service Corporation he fell to the sidewalk in a faint. Bystanders carried him into the P. S. C office. He regained consciousness in a half hour.

Mrs. Sandford is away from home and Mr. Maxwell has been in charge of her place.

FAT FEES GIVE WAY TO SALARIES, LESS PLUMP

COUNTIES TO GET SOME OF THE MONEY OFFICE HOLDERS HAVE RECEIVED.

Under the law of 1906, county clerks, surrogates, registers of deeds, and sheriffs elected this year will receive salaries instead of fees. The salaries are fixed on a basis of population. Union county officials will receive $5,500.

The salaries are fixed as follows: In counties with a population of between 125,000 and 200,000, $6,500; between 100,000 and 125,000, $5,500; between 75,000 and 100,000, $4,500; between 50,000 and 75,000, $3,500; between 30,000 and 50,000, $2,500; and in counties having less than 30,000 inhabitants, $2,000.

Essex and Hudson counties were placed under the salary system several years ago, under a separate law applying only to counties of the first class. The election in 1908 will abolish the sheriff's fees; not until 1910 will the fee system of compensation be entirely abolished in the county offices.

HIT BY A B. & O. FLIER

His Wagon Caught in Tracks in Dunellen, Driver Almost Killed.

BOTH HIS HORSES DIE

Gates Unbarred For Him As Express Train Thunders Toward Crossing—Body of Horse Carried On Engine.

His way unbarred by the gates that are supposed to safeguard drivers and foot passengers, Lester Shearer, nineteen years old, drove a two-horse delivery wagon into the path of a B. and O. flier at the Prospect avenue crossing of the Central Railroad in Dunellen, last night. He is lying today, at Muhlenberg Hospital, unconscious and in a critical condition.

Shearer has been in the employ of his aunt, Mrs. Lena Hoerster, of Somerset street, who conducts a wholesale liquor business, for two years. He drove the wagon to New Market yesterday on a regular weekly trip, and was on his way home at 7:45 o'clock, when the accident occurred.

Just before the wagon reached the crossing, train No. 13, a local, went by. The gates were closed. As Shearer drove up the gates opened, and he started across the tracks. Train No. 503, rushing at express speed, bore down upon the rig. It is said that the train followed so closely on the local that the gateman did not see its approach. Shearer had no chance to drive the wagon clear.

The engine struck the horses, and Shearer was thrown from his seat. The animals were killed outright, and Shearer was picked up unconscious. He was hurried to the hospital in the ambulance, and Dr. G. W. Endicott took charge of the case. He was suffering from concussion of the brain, a torn scalp and a compound fracture of the left arm.

The accident blocked the road for a half an hour. The body of one of the horses was carried, jammed against the pilot of the engine, over two blocks, and it was necessary to use the drill engine from the Dunellen yards to pull it away. The wagon was not badly damaged.

The accident threw Miss Margaret Mohan, who is the daughter of a veteran railroad engineer, into hysterics. She witnessed it, and gave way to her nerves on the spot. She was taken to her home.

Shearer came to North Plainfield from Jersey City, where his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Shearer, live. Mrs. Hoerster, who is Mrs. Shearer's sister, notified them of the accident last night, and they came to this city today.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

Justice Fort's Attitude.

The return of Supreme Court Justice J. Franklin Fort from Europe, and the statement he made upon his landing in this country yesterday, have not changed the Gubernatorial situation in the least so far as he is concerned. His prepared interview was entirely non-commital as to things political, but he frankly admitted, in response to questions, that he would like to be the next Governor of New Jersey. He did not propose, he said, to make any canvass whatever for the nomination, but if the honor came to him he would resign from the bench and actively engage in the campaign for election. This is exactly the stand that Justice Fort assumed before he sailed, as was made public by friends who had been taken into his confidence. There is no likelihood of his changing his position when he becomes more fully informed as to what has transpired in a political way during his absence from New Jersey.

This fact makes it apparent that the reports that he would withdraw from the contest were entirely unwarranted, for he cannot withdraw from a race in which he is not formally entered. It might be possible for his friends to withdraw him, but they are not apt to do that, and he will undoubtedly be a factor in the primary contest, in Essex county next Tuesday. He has not appealed for votes, he has set forth no platform, and he has made no promises. Those who cast their ballots for him, therefore, must be impelled to do so by the knowledge that he is the favorite of the county in office, or because they have confidence from his record that he is better fitted or more available for the honor than Sheriff Frank H. Sommer. So far as the Republican voters of Essex county will be permitted to decide in the primaries, they must make their choice between Messrs. Sommer and Fort, and the outcome of the primary contest will be watched for with great eagerness all over the State.—Newark News.

The vote was unanimously given in favor of Rev. V. V. Nicholas, of Montana.

S. P. C. C. ACCUSES MOTHER.

Woman Said to Have Hit Daughter With Flat Iron

Morristown, Sept. 7.—According to the S. P. C. C., of this city, Mrs. Catherine Bowden, of Morris Township, used "undue severity in maternal correction" in discipling her thirteen-year-old daughter, Sarah. It was represented that she hit the girl in the back with a hot flat-iron, burning her badly.

The mother's defense was that the girl has been associating with persons whom she considered unfit society for her, and Mrs. Bowden asserted she had tried every method of moral suasion to induce the girl to give up her associates, but without avail. The case came before Justice of the Peace Edward C. Johnston, who bound Mrs. Bowden over to keep the peace, Phoenix Miller becoming her security.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

DIAMOND DUST.

This afternoon at Crescent Oval, the Clinton Avenues will meet Scotch Plains in a post-season contest. In view of the strong rivalry between these teams, the game should be a fine one.

"Willie" Deegan has returned from Asbury Park, with Mrs. Deegan, and he is looking fine. "Willie" has not been playing ball very much this season, apparently having lost interest in the game.

The Jersey City Eastern League team has been greatly helped this season by securing several major league twirlers. They have proved too strong for the opposing teams as a rule.

Howard Craig, captain of the Y. M. C. A. team, has returned from his vacation. He is already planning for next season's baseball team and he hopes to make it stronger than ever.

Ralph Schoonmaker has proved to be a good utility man behind the rubber. He has all the qualities of a good ball player and fights hard to win.

Out of fourteen games played this season, the East Millstone team has won thirteen. They will play one more contest with Carl Fleischman's "All Collegiates," before closing the season.

The Westfield team, which gave the Clinton Avenues such a hard rub a few weeks ago, will meet the locals on Crescent Oval next Saturday. The contest should draw a large crowd.

Scott, who has been playing with the Y. M. C. A. boys during the past few weeks, is a valuable man. He can fill in most any position and as a sticker he is hard to beat.

The Giants are riding the greased plank this season and there is now no hope for them. The Quakers let them down another notch on Thursday to the tune of 5 to 2. The best thing possible for McGraw's men now is to plan for next season by getting the team in better condition and strengthening the weak places. There is plenty of room for improvement.

GOLF.

The final play for the Scratch cup at the Plainfield Contry Club today between Dudley H. Barrows and Lester Glenney should be exceptionally interesting to members of the club. Both players are at the top of their game and the match will undoubtedly be a close one.

Other events at the Plainfield Country Club today include the weekly competition for the Golf Committee and Green Committee cups. These competitions are increasing in interest as the season draws to a close and from the present outlook it would be exceedingly difficult to pick the winner.

The weekly competition for the President's, Club and September cups will hold the attention of the members of the Park Golf Club today and as a majority of the players are home from their vacation, there should be a large field.

An additional event will mark the play at the Plainfield Country Club today, it being the initial competition for the Autumn cup, Classes A and B. This will extend through the fall months.

An extra event scheduled at the Plainfield Country Club for next Saturday is a four ball foursome for cups.

At the Westfield Golf Club today there will be handicap match play for the players who qualified on the first four Saturdays of August. On the last Saturday of the month there will be the qualifying round for the club championship, a scratch event, open to all members of the club. The lowest sixteen scores to qualify for championship match play during October.

It is possible that the Park Golf Club will play a return home match with the Middlebrook Country Club, of Bound Brook, this fall. In the first match at Bound Brook the Parks were badly defeated, but now that the players are in better form the result should be different.

Charles A. Reed, one of the most active members of the Park Golf Club, has returned from his vacation and is in excellent condition to continue playing his favorite game. He intends to get busy now and land some of the cups in competition.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Not since Amelia Bingham first became her own manager, according to press notices, has she had so daring a play as "A Modern Lady Godiva," which she will present here this afternoon and tonight. The scenes of the new play are laid in London at the present day.

William Collier and his farce, "Caught in the Rain," will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre on September 13. Mr. Collier's popularity was never greater than it is now, and it is probable that at no time in his career has he succeeded in making his audiences laugh so often and so heartily as he is doing at present.

Hap Ward has with him in his musical comedy, "Not Yet But Soon," to be seen at the New Plainfield theatre September 12, four comedians, any one of whom should be able to carry the burden of a musical farce. They are Fred Wyckoff, Lew Kelly, Ed. Gilmore and Abe Friedland.

At the New Plainfield theatre on September 10, Eldredge & Meakin will present Mary T. Stone and Algernon Tassin's romance of the west, "Judith of the Plains." This is Mr. Tassin's first drama but he has long been a contributor of short essays and poems to the Metropolitan Magazine.

Marie Cahill, star of "Marrying Mary," the Royle-Burt-Hein musical play which will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre, September 11, was born in Brooklyn. Miss Cahill announces with much pride that she "never spoke a piece," during her childhood, and that she was never precocious and never gained the reputation of being an infant phenomenon. She was never a member of the chorus.

AMUSEMENTS.

The opening week at Proctor's newest playhouse at Elizabeth, has passed and all who attended the theatre are unanimous in their praise of everything connected with "Elizabeth's Theatre Beautiful." The soft color scheme of old ivory, and vertigris, given first, attracts attention, then the cleanliness and cheerful aspect af all appurtenances, catches an eye, then the stage, with an entire new scenery, greet one, then the show, a typical "Proctor show" every art of the headline variety, gives the patron that satisfied feeling as he leaves the theatre. The retiring rooms for the ladies, and smoking rooms for the gentlemen, are but one of the many attractions, that appeal to playgoers. Think of a Broadway show almost at your door, without Broadway prices, and you have the advanced vaudeville of F. F. Proctor, as seen at Elizabeth. Sidney Deane's production of "Christmas on the Island," Nat Haines, The Four Nelsons, Jas. A. Kiernan & Co., Milt Wood, and the other vaudevillians who amuse the patrons this week, give way next week to an equal entertaining groupe of performers next week. The large bill will be headed by that well known and popular emotional actress, "Patrice," in her greatest success, "A New Year Dream." Trumbull Sisters Sextette, composed of the Misses Magie Trumbull, Frances Trumbull, Violet Wood, Billie Seaton, Matie Adams, Estelle Wilmot, who are a bevy of pretty girls who can sing and dance. Al. H. Weston and Irene Young will appear in the latest laughing absurdity by Junie McCree and John Gilroy, entitled in "The Gadding Gossipers." One of the best of all comedy singing quartettes, The Gaiety Comedy Four, will dispense popular music intermingling with good clean comedy. McRea and Poole offer an act that is of the greatest marksman of the age. One of McRea's feats is that of shooting two rifles, one in each hand. Harry Jolson is a black-face comedian with an operatic voice that shows an evenness of tone that is seldom heard in the varieties. A new and amusing series of motion pictures will also be shown. Taken all and all the program is one that is in keeping with the bright newest of Proctor's Theatre Beautiful in Elizabeth.

The Millinery Department Has a Word to Say:

The work-room is crowding up pretty new fall Hats, designed by Miss Strohuber. She has seen all that is new from across the waters, having entree to the most exclusive Millinery importers in this country. And how near some of those charming hats are reproduced! One could hardly tell the original $75 hat from the very reasonable one made here, but then Miss Strohuber has that distinction—and you will see Hats here this fall such as Plainfield has not had before; and prices reasonable above all.

NEWARK WANTS VOTING MACHINES ABOLISHED

ITS COMMON COUNCIL ADOPTS RESOLUTION CONDEMNING THEM.

Resolutions that struck right out from the shoulders at the State's $250,000 worth of voting machines were adopted by the Newark Common Council's unanimous vote last night. In unmeasured terms the devices that are used in fifty of Newark's 140 election districts and in 450 polling places in other parts of the State were assailed. Facts and figures in connection with the use of the machines and their cost were cited by Alderman Patrick H. Ryan, Democratic majority leader, in the preamble to his resolutions.

Mr. Ryan offered the measure with a request that it receive the support of all Aldermen. The resolutions follow:

"Whereas, The voters of the election districts of this city where voting machines have been in use are almost unanimous in opposition to and comdemnation of the voting machines as a means of voting, believing as they do that the use of such a device interferes with a free and untrammeled exercise of that greatest of all privileges accorded the American citizen—his right of suffrage; and,

"Whereas, The use of such voting machines entails upon the taxpayer a cost of $24 per polling place more than that incurred by the use of the old and time-honored ballot box, which has always seemed to be an emblem of the freedom he treasures, be it

"Resolved, That the Common Council of the city of Newark condemn the use of the voting machine at any election held in the city, and demand that the proper authority cause said machines to be removed, and that the Senators and members of Assembly of Essex county be requested to use all honorable means to cause the repeal of all laws providing for and requiring the use of the voting machines in the City of Newark; and, be it further

"Roselved, That the city clerk be and is hereby directed to cause a certified copy of this action by the Common Council of Newark to be placed in the hands of the Governor, the Secretary of State, the Senator and members of Assembly of Essex county and of the Voting Machine Commission."

There was no argument on the resolutions. Mr. Ryan presented the copy to City Clerk James F. Connelly and as soon as it had been read by that official the vote was taken.

WAR ON BISHOPS' BILL.

Mayor Haussling Sends Letter to "Liberal" Mass Meeting.

Answering a call for a mass meeting of "liberal citizens," nearly 1,000 assembled in Turn Hall last night at Elizabeth, and listened to addresses vigorously denouncing the Bishops bill, by ex-Mayor AdolphLankering, Hoboken; George Herman, of Newark, and Ewald Broeker, of Elizabeth. A letter of regret was received from Mayor Haussling, of Newark, in which he said that but for a previous engagement it would have given him the greatest pleasure to speak at the meeting, and added, "I feel that it is necessary for the liberal citizens of the State of New Jersey to express themselves in unmistakable manner at this time."

A lengthy set of resolutions demanding the repeal of the Bishops bill or some amelioration of present irksome conditions was adopted, and will be forwarded to the Mayor and city Council of Elizabeth with the request that the legislative committee be instructed to do all in its power to secure the repeal of the obnoxious measure or the passage of some adequate amendment.

JERSEY MAKES CIGARS

Marked Increase in Tobacco Industry in this State.

NOW SIXTH ON LIST

Manufacture of Tobacco In This Country Is Principally For Domestic Uses.

The Bureau of the Census at Washington has issued a report on the manufacture of tobacco. The statistics presented relate to the production of cigars, cigarettes, chewing and smoking tobacco and snuff.

The manufacture of cigars and cigarettes, it is stated in the report, is one of the few factory industries that are represented in every State and Territory. The production ranges in value from $9,310, reported for the State of Mississippi, to $60,623,617, reported for New York. The production in New York represents in value 28.3 per cent. of the total production ($214,350,051) of the United States. There were four other States for which the reported value of products exceeded $10,000,000. These States, with the value of product, were as follows: Pennsylvania, $39,079,122; Florida, $16,764,276; Ohio, $13,241,230, and Illinois, $11,669,485. As compared with the census of 1900 a very noteworthy increase in the value of product is shown for New Jersey, in which the production increased from $2,647,595 for 1900 to $8,331,611 in 1905. This increase was due chiefly to the establishment of a number of large cigar factories, most of which were owned by one corporation. As a result, New Jersey advanced from the twelfth place in 1900 to the sixth at the census of 1905.

The production of chewing and smoking tobacco and snuff is confined to a smaller number of States than that of cigars and cigarettes. The total production reported for the United States is $116,767,630. Of this total, $27,836,422 was reported for Missouri and $25,488,271 for North Carolina, these being the two leading States.

The figures for 1905 show that the value of products in the tobacco industry was $331,117,681, the capital employed being $323,983,501. In the same year the industry expended $126,088,608 for materials, $62,640,303 for wages, $8,800,424 for salaries and $80,145,016 for miscellaneous expenses.

According to the reports of the commissioner of internal revenue the total amount of tobacco manufactured in 1904 was 448,511,583 pounds, the quantity used in the manufacture of cigars and cigarettes being 141,020,029 pounds, as compapred with 307,491,554 pounds used for the production of chewing and smoking tobacco and snuff.

According to figures derived from the reports of the commissioner of internal revenue, the number of cigars manufactured in the calendar year of 1904 was 7,476,669,472 and the number of cigarettes was 3,433,993,422.

The number of wage-earners employed in 1905 in this industry was 159,408; this represents the average number employed during the year and includes 85,691 men, 66,301 women, and 7,416 children under 16 years of age. The proportion of women comprised in the total has greatly increased in recent years. In 1880 only 23.1 per cent. of the total number of wage-earners in this industry were women. This proportion increased to 29.8 per cent. in 1890, 37.2 per cent. in 1900, and 41.6 in 1905.

It would appear from the figures presented in this bulletin that the manufacture of tobacco in this country is principally for domestic consumption. This is particularly true as regards cigars.

LOCAL OPTION GAINS THROUGHOUT COUNTRY

TWENTY-FIVE STATES GIVE VOTERS SAY ON EXCISE REGULATION.

In connection with the present agitation in New Jersey over the excise question, Alderman William P. Martin, of Newark, who is chairman of the State Republican League for Equal Taxation and Limited Franchises, has been looking into the question of what other States have done and are doing with excise matters. To inquiries addressed to authorities, Mr. Martin has received replies and information from forty-two States and Territories.

Significant illustration of the trend of public sentiment and legislation concerning the liquor question is found in the fact that of the forty-two States and Territories heard from, four—Maine, Kansas, North Dakota and Georgia—have prohibition, while not less than twenty-five States have established local option as the basis of their solution of the problem.

These facts gathered by Mr. Martin of conditions in other States also show that California is the only State in the Union that has established absolute home rule in the regulation of excise affairs, along the lines declared for by Sheriff Frank H. Sommer, Senator Everitt Colby and the eleven "new idea" candidates for Republican Assembly nominations in Essex county. Reports from that State indicate that the home rule plan in excise matters works smoothly there, and with general satisfaction. Home rule has been secured in most of the cities of California by application of the initiative and referendum principle to municipal affairs, which is the plan to which the "new idea" movement is pledged.

The movement for local option and prohibition is especially through through the southern part of the country. While Vermont and New Hampshire tried prohibition years ago, and gave it up for high license, and the one big issue in Maine this year is the question of resubmitting to the people the constitutional amendment for prohibition, looking to its repeal, the Georgia Legislature this year has enacted laws forbidding the manufacture or sale of liquor in that State. It is especially significant, too, that in Oregon, California, Missouri, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Texas, Maine and other States, as in New Jersey, the agitation for local option has been almost entirely coincident with the agitation for initiative and referendum. In Oregon, the local option law was adopted by the voters at the polls, having been proposed and submitted by initiative petition

A NEW GAME.

How to Play at What Is Called Circulating Library.

A novel and entertaining form of conversation is called the circulating library.

The invited guests should include an equal number of girls and men, and the ladies are asked to come costumed to represent books. One may either dress to represent the book title or something may be worn to suggest it, as in the ordinary book tea, says the Philadelphia Press.

The names of the different books represented are catalogued duly under their initial letters, and this list is pinned up in the parlor.

As each girl arrives she is conducted by the hostess, who acts as librarian, into a rear room or, if only one apartment is available for the fun, behind a screen, arranged at the rear of the drawing room.

Each man on arriving reads the list of books and decides which title he would prefer.

He appeals to the librarian, who leads out to him the book he has selected.

Each borrower is permitted to retain a book ten minutes, not longer, after which he must return it to the shelves under penalty of paying a forfeit.

He then selects another name from the list.

Of course the borrower must not be allowed to discover by whom the different books are being personified.

This same attractive idea can also be arranged as a philanthropic venture with a large number of books and five or six librarians to seet that the men patrons are waited upon.

The money is taken in the form of twenty-five cent entrance fees and also in fines paid by those who disregard rules and fail to return specially interesting volumes within time limits.

Hunterdon County Tax Rate.

Flemington, September 7.—The Hunterdon County Board of Taxation has completed its work of figuring out the tax rate for the year of 1907. The net taxable values in the county last year was $19,505,987, and this year $19,907,295. The total expenditure last year was $244,467.27, and this year they are $307,465.96, an increase of ..62,998.69. Average county rate this year is increased from $1.15 to $1.55. The increase is mainly due to the increased demands of the different municipalities.

Miss H. Alma VanCamp, of Roycefield, has been entertaining the Misses Ethel and Stella Rink, of this city.

STORIES OF THE SECRET SERVICE

BY CAPTAIN PATRICK D. TYRRELL.

STORY No. 3

The MISSOURI LAND LEAGUERS

Being an Account of the Operations and Conviction of the Band of Land Thieves Operating in Missouri in the Early Seventies.

By CAPTAIN PATRICK D. TYRRELL

Developments up to this time had revealed not less than 20 active members of the land league. As might be expected, they all were in close touch with one another, and with the ringleader, and it became apparent that in order to capture all and effectually smash the ring some plan would have to be devised whereby the federal authorities could move against them all simultaneously. Still placing most importance on making sound cases against Lindsay and Van Hise, I called to my assistance E. M. Stedman, a secret service operative of much ability.

"Assume the role of a lumberman looking for a site to operate a mill," were my instructions, "go to Shannon county and open negotiations with Lindsay personally for a tract of timber land, holding the deal open till we are ready to act."

"THIS IS AN OUTRAGE," HE SAID, ANGRILY.

Stedman followed instructions implicitly. Attired as a sawmill man of much means, he began negotiations with Lindsay for Shannon county lands. Lindsay took the bait and offered to sell him a fine tract of 25,000 acres at 50 cents an acre. These negotiations were conducted personally. Lindsay claimed to own the land, assuring a good title, and representing himself as the owner of thousands of acres of other land in different counties in Missouri. Stedman left Lindsay without closing the deal, and went to Vinton, Ia., his supposed home, to which place he told Lindsay he had been called by important business. From Vinton he wrote asking for descriptions of other tracts. The purpose of opening such a correspondence was to get Lindsay on record in writing. Again the arch conspirator swallowed the bait, sending to Stedman in his own handwriting descriptions of various tracts he thought might be suitable for his correspondent's supposed purpose.

While in the east working on the Pittsburg angle of the case I wrote from Erie, Pa., to Orlando Van Hise in Cleveland, representing myself as James Hall, a sawmill owner, looking for a new business base. Van Hise's advertisement of timber lands had attracted my attention, I wrote. Van Hise answered that he could sell me 25,000 acres of desirable timber in one tract, and suggested that I come to Cleveland to talk the matter over with him. So to Cleveland I went immediately. Wearing the rough suit of a lumberman, and with my trousers tucked into the tops of my boots, I registered at the Weddell house under still another name.

While the land ringsters up to this time had no reason to believe they were being watched, they had acquired the trait of suspicion and alertness common to all criminals, great and small. I could afford to take no chances of having my identity discovered by Van Hise, and therefore at every turn covered my tracks as well as I knew how. In line with this policy, I even took a roundabout course to Van Hise's office in Superior street. I introduced myself as the Erie party who had written to him.

"I'm glad to meet you, Mr. Hall," said Van Hise, effusively. After the customary small talk that precedes getting down to business he said:

"So you are looking for timber lands. Well, I believe I can furnish what you want."

"Have you much land of this kind?" I asked.

"Plenty of it."

"At what price?"

"That depends on the land. If you are prepared to take a large tract, I can probably make you a price of 50 cents an acre for land that will suit your purpose."

"What arrangements can you make for time? I have a certain amount of money. I have sold my 'mulev' mill and am thinking of buying a portable circular mill. Until I decide on this point I don't know just how I will be prepared to pay down on the land."

"Those matters can be arranged to suit you. If you take the land and put a mill on it, I will have no fear of your getting away from me without paying the balance."

Our conversation was of the pleasant kind that marks a deal about to be closed. Van Hise showed me elaborate maps of the Missouri districts in which he had lands for sale, and marked off the tract he proposed to sell me. But I did not close the deal then, pleading that I wanted a little time to decide on the style of mill to use and to arrange other details. I told him I would go to Missouri to look at the lands, and asked for descriptions, which he cheerfully gave me.

He went further, instructing me to make myself known to the clerk of the Missouri county to which I was supposed to be going. This clerk, he said, would be glad to show me the land at his, Van Hise's, expense, and would give me all the information relative to this and other points I might desire. This bit of accommodation on Van Hise's part indicated clearly the hold the leaguers had on certain county officials, and the part the latter played in the marketing of the stolen goods.

My plan was to conduct negotiations with Lindsay and Van Hise in such a way that they would have the deeds to the land they were to sell Stedman and me in their respective offices on the day the arrests were to be made, thereby providing fresh evidence to be used against them in the courts. There was no hitch in this plan. Lindsay followed up the negotiations opened by Stedman with the celerity ordinarily displayed by a man of business anxious to close a deal in which there was big profit. Van Hise was just as eager and unsuspecting in his efforts to unload 25,000 acres on "James Hall," sawmill operator. The plan was working smoothly and promised great results.

The amount of detailed work, which at this late date would be of no interest to my readers, was enormous. I spent six weeks alone in the Washington land office withdrawing papers for examination and comparison. Frequent trips were made to southern Missouri, Ohio and Pennsylvania, the network of evidence being filled in with a patch here and a patch there.

I believe I neglected to say in beginning this story that the communication to Secretary Schurz, which he had turned over to Chief Brooks, and which was the real starting point of this historic criminal case, had been written by one Leo Whybark, of St. Louis, a former colleague of Robert Lindsay. To all detectives it is well known that many of the most important cases have their origin in the falling out of thieves among themselves. Lindsay and Whybark had split over a division of the spoils, the latter claiming that he had been worsted by Lindsay, who had grown domineering in his treatment of subordinates. Whybark's revenge took the form of his letter to the secretary of the interior. During the investigation Whybark was of considerable service to the government, but later was arrested as one of the leaguers. His sentence, however, was never enforced, this being his reward for his services to Uncle Sam.

In Cleveland George Linn, after whom was named a suburb, Linndale, was found to be almost as important a leaguer as Van Hise. John K. Corwin, the notary used by Van Hise and Linn, was a member of one of the most prominent families in Ohio, but, through his overindulgence in whisky, was a pliable tool in the hands of others. John F. Gardiner was a banker and a man of high business standing. In the work of producing false titles the notarial work was not the least item, as all the papers had to be sworn to, and it was necessary to find notaries who not only would consent to take acknowledgements they knew to be false, but who could be trusted to maintain the utmost secrecy. Two more of these notaries were Herman E Schuster and John J. Brady, Jr., of St. Louis. In all, 22 men had been dragged into our net for complicity in one form or another in this great conspiracy.

At last the time came to strike. I believed that the evidence in all the cases was strong enough to convict. Warrants were sworn out and placed in the hands of deputy United States marshals in the various cities where the arrests were to be made. The greatest secrecy was observed in getting out the papers and arranging other preliminaries. With Lindsay and Van Hise, Stedman and I arranged to have all the papers in our deals with them in their respective offices on the day the arrests were planned. It was the 15th day of March in the year after the investigation was begun that I entered the private office of Robert L. Lindsay in St. Louis with Deputy Marshal Soest.

Lindsay, jaunty and busy, was at his desk. I quietly told him he was under arrest.

"Who are you, and what am I under arrest for?" he demanded.

I told him who I was, and, briefly, what he was wanted for.

"All right," he said, coolly, reaching for his hat, "but you came just in time to spoil a big trade for me."

Then he became indignant.

"This is an outrage," he said, angrily; "a plot put up by Carl Schurz to ruin me. It's the work of the d—d reformers in the republican party, and is going to hurt the party."

As nearly at the same instant as was physically possible, the arrests of a score or more of the leaguers was made in St. Louis and other cities. All were placed under bonds, the furnishing of bail being a comparatively easy matter for men of such prominence and means as most of them were.

Then began a most desperate fight for freedom on the part of the land leaguers—a fight in which was employed every agency from the influence of the highest dignitaries in the republican party to the intimidation of even minor witnesses by threats of lynching. Among the men who had been carelessly let into possession of incriminating information against Lindsay was Frank Smith, an employe of President Thompson, of the Boatmen's bank, of St. Louis, who had a country seat at Ironton. One day the following notice was sent to Smith from a mysterious source:

> Frank Smith, Ironton, Mo.
> Look at Thompson's
> Prepare your coffin maker—he will want you to come to him very soon. We will on August 16, at 12 o'clock, midnight, come to your house and hang you to a tree until you are dead. May you be ready to die.
> BEWARE
> PARTY OF LYNCHERS.

With the history of the tree of death in Arcadia valley in their minds the persons upon whom such notices were served did not look upon them as jests or idle threats. Seventeen corpses had dangled from the limbs of this tree in mute testimony of the sincerity of purpose of the land leaguers; and the receipt of such a notice after the leaguers had been brought to bay was not a pleasant incident. The government maintained surveillance over the criminals and their suspected allies, however, and prevented the execution of any threats. The notice sent to Smith I found to be in the handwriting of Robert Lindsay.

It was in high political places that the most telling fight was made by the leaguers to escape the penalty of their crimes. To explain this fight I must revert for a moment to the national political situation of that year. Grant had completed his globe-circling tour and was being urged for a third presidential term. Among the 306 delegates to the Chicago convention that stood by him to the last were James Lindsay and Carroll R. Peck. Grant was defeated for nomination by the unexpected launching of the name of James A. Garfield, around whom the anti-Grant forces rallied. The schism in the party preceding the convention was widened by the nomination and election of Garfield, and the bitterness of feeling was nowhere more intense than in Missouri.

Robert Lindsay was prominent in the Grant faction of that state, being an officer in a large political organization with such stanch republicans as Chauncey I. Filley and others of equal prominence. His father was Grant's personal friend and political beneficiary, and the relations between the former president and the Lindsay family were very warm, as indicated by James Lindsay's appointment to one responsible position after he had proved a defaulter in a previous one.

United States Attorney Bliss, upon whom fell the chief burden of prosecution of the leaguers in the courts, was appointed by President Grant, and other government officials, the weight of whose influence should have been on the side of the prosecution, were found lukewarm in the cause. I do not mean to imply that there was any overt neglect of duty on the part of the government prosecutors nor that any of the Grant politicians used their influence corruptly; but I do say that from mysterious sources and in the most mysterious manner there came strange happenings—all in favor of the defendants. It did not take me long to see that at the rate matters were going the land leaguers would soon be free without trial.

At the time of his arrest Robert Lindsay charged his trouble to Carl Schurz. In the newspapers he charged that Secretary Schurz had discharged James Lindsay from the Ironton land office without cause, and that he, Robert, had issued a circular attacking Schurz for this act. In order to get revenge for the issuance of this circular Schurz had concocted this plot against the Lindsays, according to those worthies. The secretary of the interior was a member of the anti-Grant faction, and this gave some color, with the uninformed, to the cry of his political plottings against the Lindsays. This is the first time since the celebrated land fraud cases came before the public that the exact truth concerning their origin has been made public. The starting point, as I have related, was the falling out of Robert Lindsay and his lieutenant, Whybark, and not any desire on the part of Secretary Schurz to punish his political adversaries in the republican party.

To raise the cry of political persecution, however, was to put forward the strongest available defense. James Lindsay came forward with a newspaper interview in defense of his son and in condemnation of the federal authorities. Carroll R. Peck, in the Ironton paper owned by him, charged me with having involved the government in an expense of $80,000 to satisfy the political enmities of my superiors. As a matter of fact, about $1,000 had been spent up to that time. The strongest political forces in the state were being pushed to their utmost capacity to bring about the release of Lindsay, especially, and the bitterest of feuds were fomented.

After the 19th of September, 1881, when the word flashed across the land that the shot fired by Guiteau on the railway platform at Washington had proved fatal, a prominent government official said to me:

"Now that Garfield is dead there is little chance of convicting the land leaguers."

This statement was made on the assumption that President Arthur was friendly to the Grant element; but this turned out to be an erroneous surmise. In answer to it I said:

"The republican party cannot afford to stand sponsor for these men."

Fully as I realized the strength of the political movement in favor of the criminals I was scarcely prepared for the sudden turn which affairs took.

The cases had been brought in the United States court. Suddenly it became whispered about that the federal law governing land patents had been construed in such a way as to release the conspirators. This construction was to the following effect: That a land patent once issued was valid so far as the government was concerned without reference to the manner in which it had been obtained—in other words, if the fraud was not discovered before the patent was issued it could not be used to nullify the patent nor punish the guilty.

Here was a pretty how-d'ye-do. After a year's hard work had revealed a crime involving the clear theft of from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 acres of valuable land from the government and thousands of individuals had been robbed, the promoters of the plot were to be restored to liberty and their former places in society because a judge claimed to have discovered a possible construction of the federal law that would attain this result. There was no claim that the land leaguers had not committed the acts with which they stood charged, but their friends claimed—and unfortunately they found ready support among government officials—that the discovery of this technicality justified the dismissal of the cases.

My position was that merely of the officer who had been largely instrumental in planning and carrying out the investigation at the orders of my superiors. But I was determined that the criminals should not escape if it was in my power to prevent. I had seen all the august power of government arrayed against malefactors whose crimes had been infinitesimal compared with that of these kid-gloved conspirators, and to me it seemed a violation of every tenet of eternal right to allow these men to go free because they were strong in the councils of their political party.

I was also convinced that the judge in question was in error legally, and in support of my view I had a letter written by Assistant Secretary of State Bell to John Sherman, secretary of the treasury, calling attention to section 5403 of the statutes, which provided that any person stealing or destroying any paper, record or document from any federal office could be fined and imprisoned. This section covered fully the thefts of land patents. Besides, it had been held by the supreme court that the actual delivery of a patent, as with a deed, was necessary to pass title.

So far as the use of their technicality was concerned the defendants gained their point. On the construction referred to the cases were allowed to die in the federal court by the judge who had made the strange construction of the law.

There was but one recourse. In the perpetration of the big crime numerous individual offenses against state laws had been committed, such as forgery, perjury and obtaining money under false pretenses. We might find justice in these state courts. This was suggested, but my superiors in Washington doubted the probability of our being able to convict in the state courts on the theory that they were even more subject to influence than the federal courts.

Most fortunately there came to the rescue of justice at this critical moment a man with splendid fighting ability and a deep sense of duty—Circuit Attorney Harris, of St. Louis. He possessed in a marked degree the qualifications that the federal prosecutors lacked. With him I went over the evidence. He leaped into the breach with a vim that was refreshing. He was invulnerable to political or other influences and soon mastered and marshaled for use the great mass of evidence.

In the meantime a touch of romance had been added to the drear details of the case in Cleveland. In the office of Orlando Van Hise there had been employed a clerk named Mary A. Johnson. Her sister had married George Linn, another member of the ring. She was also a notary public, and had taken many fraudulent acknowledgments for her employer. The government had intended to use Mary Johnson as a witness against Van Hise, but Cupid took a hand soon after the arrest and Van Hise and the girl were married, thus giving the government a serious setback in the prosecution of Van Hise, for a wife could not be used as a witness against her husband.

The dismissal of the cases in the federal courts and the institution in the state courts of course necessitated the rearresting of the defendants and the furnishing of new bonds. When we went to Cleveland we found that Van Hise and Linn had decamped for parts unknown, presumably Europe. The others were secured, however, and the trials were held in St. Louis, Mo.; Steubenville, O., and Clarion, Pa.

Circuit Attorney Harris had mastered the evidence so thoroughly and had all the cases so well in hand that he went to Steubenville to assist in the prosecution of the Ohio conspirators. Robert Lindsay retained the most able lawyers he could find and every artifice known to them was employed. At the end of the first battle in court Robert L. Lindsay was sentenced to serve nine years in the penitentiary. This term he served, minus the time allowance for good behavior. I do not know if he be alive or dead. Far be it from me in these narratives to seek to follow any man past the point where he expiated his crime in the manner prescribed by the courts. I hope he learned well the lesson that education, a good position in society and powerful political affiliations do not palliate crime. Crime in broadcloth is still crime.

The entire 22 were convicted and were sentenced to serve from two to nine years. These were the conspirators, big and little:

In the little courtroom at Clarion, Pa., was laid the pathetic closing scene of this memorable crime. William Burns, the gray-haired father, and Addison, his son in the prime of manhood, were tried together. Their lawyers fought a good fight but lost. After they had been found guilty by a jury they were called before the bar for sentence. I can give the exact language of the judge, for it was stenographically preserved—not a general custom in those days:

"The offense committed by you is a very grave one. It was committed under very remarkable circumstances and seldom is crime committed which is so deeply imbedded in perjury as this crime has been. In order to make this forgery effectual, to impose upon the persons victimized, it was necessary to resort to falsehood, to impose upon notaries public and to impose forged papers upon the officials of the United States in the land office. The evidence showed that this single transaction was interwoven with many others of the same kind. That these several transactions have extended over a period of several years during which falsehood was continually resorted to; that one or the other of you have repeatedly forged instruments, imposed upon the officers of the land office and that you have repeatedly victimized the citizens of this commonwealth is proved. In the history of the crimes of this country, there is no one that I know of that has developed so complete a system and so skillful an intertwining of falsehood, perjury and forgery.

"You had abundance of time to reflect; you are both men of mature years. You knew the effect of your conduct. You knew that you were imposing upon the men who indicted you. You knew that you were reaping gains in this unlawful way and that you were imposing on the department at Washington and deceiving the officials in Missouri. You knew you were unsettling the land titles in that state and giving to the citizens of this commonwealth an entirely worthless title and were getting from them as much money as you could by a system of false dealing. We regret the position you are in, and that the evidence was not such as would have warranted the jury in doing otherwise than they have. We do not desire to continue our remarks in a way to lacerate your feelings, but it is our duty to administer the law as faithfully as we can. William Burns, I sentence you to pay a fine of $500 and to serve seven years at hard labor in the Allegheny penitentiary, and Addison Burns, the same sentence is imposed on you."

Father and son were led away to solitary confinement and the curtain was rung down on the greatest conspiracy of its kind of the century.

FREEMAN SPRINGS ANOTHER INVECTIVE

EAST ORANGER REFORMER AGAIN ATTACKS JUSTICE FORT.

Alden Freeman, following his action in attacking Chandler W. Riker at a dinner given to a party of his friends, played host at another dinner last night in the Continental Hotel, Newark, and after telling his half-hundred guests they were not in any way to be bound by anything he said, made another attack upon Supreme Court Justice J. Franklin Fort.

Mr. Freeman had a carefully prepared address which he read before the dinner party, a gathering of men of various political faiths, including many New Idea workers in East Orange. Several banners representing Sommer ward clubs in East Orange were placed about the table. Sheriff Sommer was not present at the gathering. Mr. Freeman said:

"Judge Fort sees fit to content himself at this time with raising a question of veracity between us. If that outcome of the controversy is satisfactory to Judge Fort, I am, for my part, content to let the public choose between us as to which is to be believed." Having said this Mr. Freeman proceeded to lambast Judge Fort, accusing him of being avowedly a candidate, and having "positively declined to discuss the charge of malfeasance on the bench, made with great particularity by a distinguished citizen of Middlesex county, Charles A. Bloomfield, of Metuchen, in connection with the Amboy bridge corruption case." Mr. Freeman bitterly animadverted to the "time worn excuse of the dignity of the judicial ermine, with which he (Judge Fort) seeks to cover his past as by some magic tarnhelm," and then the speaker alleged that some years ago Judge Fort had acted for certain brewery interests when chairman of a Republican State committee to shape the action of the convention on the excise question.

For this, Mr. Freeman said, Judge Fort was retired from politics for some years. Mr. Freeman quoted from that very reliable authority, Sackett's "Modern Battles of Trenton," to prove his statements, and he made vague references to other scandals which he might exploit if he had a mind.

TRIMMER CHEATED HIMSELF.

Collector of Roselle Borough Sued for Alleged Shortage.

Charles B. Trimmer, collector of the borough of Roselle, was served yesterday with papers in a suit for $3,000 in an action in tort alleging shortages in accounts. The actual amount involved is $1,697.02. The suit is brought by the Mayor and Common Council of Roselle. In one instance it is alleged that the collector, when directed to take $1,500 out of the borough's funds and pay it to the school fund, credited himself with paying out that amount, but failed to charge himself with its receipt for the school fund, of which he is custodian.

The discrepancies are due, it is alleged, to gross carelessness, as in several instances Trimmer cheated himself by crediting too much to the borough. It seems he mingled his own and the borough's money.

REV. MR. SHAW RESIGNS

Pastor of Local Seventh-day Baptist Church Accepts a Call.

LEAVES ON JANUARY 1

Will Take Charge of Church at North Loup, Neb., Vacated By Rev. Dr. Gardner.

Rev. George B. Shaw, who has been pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church for five years, has resigned, the same to take effect December 31, to accept the call to the pastorate of the denomination's church at North Loup, Nebraska, recently vacated by Rev. Dr. T. L. Gardner, who today assumes the duties of editorship of the Sabbath Recorder, succeeding Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis.

The resignation was read at the church services Sabbath morning by Asa F. Randolph, clerk of the church, and there was not only general surprise among those present, but deep and sincere regret that Mr. Shaw has decided to leave. A special church meeting has been called for Sunday night to consider the resignation.

Mr. Shaw, previous to coming to Plainfield, was the pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, New York, where he performed a good work. During his pastorate in Plainfield he has accomplished much for the denomination and has been instrumental in building up the church and increasing its activities. Soon after Rev. Mr. Gardner was called from the pastorate of the North Loup church to the editorship of the Recorder, there were rumors that that church intended calling Mr. Shaw as a successor to Dr. Gardner. The call was finally made but Mr. Shaw said that he would not give his answer until after due deliberation. The North Loup church is a large and important one and offers a field for greater activity and usefulness. The Plainfield church has no idea who will succeed Mr. Shaw here.

MRS. BAKER BURIED.

Funeral Services of H. H. Baker's Widow.

The funeral service of Mrs. Cynthia Baker, widow of Rev. H. H. Baker, was held from the late home on East Fifth street, yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. There was a large gathering of relatives and friends, including many of the older residents of the city.

Rev. George B. Shaw, pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church, of which Mrs. Baker was a member; assisted by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, was in charge of the service. Mr. Shaw read the Scripture lesson and Dr. Lewis made a few remarks concerning the long and exemplary Christian life of Mrs. Baker. The burial was in Hillside cemetery.

Dr. Gardner Assumes Editorship.

Rev. Dr. T. L. Gardner, formerly pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist chuch at North Loup, Nebraska, who resigned to accept the editorship of the Sabbath Recorder, succeeding Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, entered upon his new duties today. He will have full charge of the Recorder. Dr. Lewis resigned to be able to devote more time to advancing the interests of the denomination through the publication of books and other special literature.

Sentence Suspended.

Dominick Paretti, arraigned on complaint of Mrs. Mary Green, who said his children were allowed to annoy her and her children, promised Judge Runyon in the city court this morning, through Lawyer John P. Owens, to keep the little Parettis in order. Sentence was suspended.

MR. AND MRS. DUNHAM TWENTY-FIVE YEARS WED

FRIENDS PRESENT PUNCH BOWL TO THE COUPLE.

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Dunham, of Madison avenue, who on Saturday celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding, were happily surprised at their home in the evening by a large company of relatives and friends from the Seventh-day Baptist church. The affair was a total surprise, the couple not having the slightest intimation of it. During the evening there were presented to Mr. and Mrs. Dunham a handsome silver punch bowl and ladel and several pieces of cut glas.

The presentation speech was made by O. S. Rogers and responded to by Mr. Dunham on behalf of his wife and himself. A feature of the celebration was an informal program of music, including several vocal solos by Alfred A. Williams, of Denver, Colo., who is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur L. Titsworth.

Mrs. Dunham was a native of Central New York, but was residing in Plainfield, when Mr. Dunham met and married her. They have lived here ever since. Mr. Dunham is a civil engineer of repute, having performed work in all parts of the country. He was also a city and county engineer. Both he and his wife are active in the affairs of the Seventh-day Baptist church.

JEWISH NEW YEAR'S IS BEING OBSERVED TODAY

SOMETHING OF THE DAY AND ITS OBSERVANCE BY THE FAITHFUL.

With three curiously intoned blasts of the shofar or ram's horn, the Jewish New York was ushered in at twilight last evening. Services began at the Synagogue Children of Israel, New street, and will continue all day. The Plainfield Hebrews are observing the day generally.

The stores of Jewish merchants throughout the city will be closed all day in honor of the advent of the New Year.

At the synogogue prayers are recited by the cantor or chanted by the choir, and the congregation voices its thanks for the blessings of the last year.

The Jewish New Year is observed in accordance with the injunction: "And in the seventh month on the first day of the month, shall ye have a holy convocation; no servile work shall ye do; a day of blowing the cornet shall it be unto you."

The cornet mentioned in the Bible is the ram's horn or shofar, and is used in all Jewish synagogues on the new year. In the orthodox synagogues the man who has this duty must be an exceedingly religious Jew. He must not have shaved his beard. He must not have committed any offense which would bar him from this sacred office. If he has done such a trivial thing as smoking a cigar on the Sabbath he would be barred.

When he is ready to blow the shofar, he covers his head with the tallith, a silken cloth, and takes his stand at the altar, beside the rabbi, and at certain places in the course of the prayers blows the solemn sounds. The congregation does not look toward him when the piercing and fantastic notes of the shofar reverberate through the synagogue.

W. L. GLENNEY WINS CUP

Defeats D. H. Barrows in Scratch Trophy Play at the Country Club.

RESULTS ON SATURDAY

Willson Gets First Honors for Golf Committee Cup and Burke For Greens Cup.

In the final play for the Scratch cup at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday, W. Lester Glenney displayed the best form and by playing the better golf defeated Dudley H. Barrows, 6 up and 4 to play. The match was not quite as close as expected, but the contestants at times played a brilliant game.

E. T. Willson with a net score of 79 won first honors for the Golf Committee cup, while Dudley H. Barrows with an 82 finished second and W. Lester Glenney with an 84 received one point for the trophy. As some of the crack players are putting up a fast game, the Golf committee is adding strokes to their scores. The cards returned for the Golf Committee Cup were as follows:

E. T. Willson, 89, 10-79; Dudley H. Barrows, 80, plus 2-82; W. Lester Glenney, 82, plus 2-84; Charles A. Stover, 93, 9-84; Stuart H. Patterson, 94, 10-84; Frank O. Reinhart, 82, plus 3-85.

C. C. Burke, Sr., won first honors for for the Green committee cup with a net score of 78, while J. P. Murray finished second with a 79 and C. P. Hamilton was third with an 80. Although playing in Class B for this trophy, J. P. Muray is a Class A player in all other events. The scores:

C. C. Burke, Sr., 88, 10-78; J. P. Murray, 91, 12-79; C. P. Hamilton, 100, 20-80; Hugh F. Fox, 95, 14-81.

The initial play for the Autumn cups, Class A and B, was also an event of interest. According to the rules governing this competition two players must qualify each Saturday this month for match play in October. In Class A on Saturday, E. T. Wjllson and J. P. Murray qualified with a net score of 79. In Class B, C. P. Hamilton qualified and A. E. Barclay and L. H. Gates were tied and this must be played off to determine who shall be the second player to qualify.

These scores were returned in Class A:

E. T. Willson, 89, 10-79; J. P. Murray, 91, 12-79; Hugh F. Fox, 95, 14-81; Dudley H. Barrows, 80, plus 2-82; W. Lester Glenney, 82, plus 2-84; Charles A. Stover, 93, 9-84; Stuart H. Patterson, 94, 10-84; Frank O. Reinhart, 83, plus 2-85.

Class B—C. P. Hamilton, 100, 20-80; A. E. Barclay, 100, 15-85; L. H. Gates, 110, 25-85.

There was a large field out at the Park Golf Club on Saturday, when play was continued for the President's, Golf club and September cups. Low score were the rule and as the season progresses the rivalry grows intense. Charles B. Morse still leads in the competition for the President's and Golf club trophies. He won points for each on Saturday with his score of 97, 10-87.

R. V. Carpenter was low net player on Saturday. His score of 75 gave him first honors for the President's and September cups, while he was tied with Rev. C. L. Goodrich with a gross score of 101 for honors for the Scratch cup.

R. V. Carpenter, 101, 26-75; W. V. Byard, 97, 11-86; C. B. Morse, 97, 10-87; Reuben Knox, 103, 15-88; J. B. Betts, 119, 30-89; Louis K. Hyde, 105, 15-90; Charles A. Reed, 103, 11-92; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 101, 9-92; E. A. Lyons, 118, 24-94; Dr. H. K. Carroll, 104, 7-97.

One Drink That Led On.

James O'Rourke, arrested Saturday night at Park and Crescent avenues for drunkenness, was arraigned before Judge Runyon in the city court this morning. He said he hadn't tasted whiskey for two years up to Saturday, but that illness caused him to take a drink and he couldn't control the appetite it arouse. He promised to swear off again, and Judge Runyon suspended sentence.

J. P. Humble Retires.

Joseph P. Humble, one of the oldest merchants of the borough, having conducted a grocery there for thirty-three years, has retired, selling the business to Wiggins & Hurley, of Philadelphia.

BUDDING ARCHITECT ACTS AS OWN LAWYER

AND IS SUCCESSFUL, THE COMPLAINT AGAINST HIM BEING DISMISSED.

Accused of cruelty to a horse and reckless driving, Joseph Miller, Jr., a young man employed as an architect's assistant, was arraigned before Judge Runyon in the City Courtt ihis morning. The complaint was dismissed. Miller conducted his own case with the aplomb of a practicing lawyer.

Acting Roundsman F. S. McCarthy placed Miller under arrest after 1.30 o'clock yesterday morning, on West Front street, after Arthur Robinson had reported him for reckless driving and cruelty. The policeman considered the horse's condition sufficient to warrant the arrest on the cruelty charge. After the arrest the roundsman located Walter Sheets and John Smith, motorman and conductor of a trolley car with which Miller was said to have raced to and from Bound Brook.

The trolley men testified that a buggy was driven recklessly before and beside the car from Dunellen to Bound Brook and back to this city. Miller aroused the ire of the witnesses by his mode of questioning, but he established the fact that they could not identify him as the driver. He denied driving recklessly, and an employee of the Plainfield Cab Company, from whom he hired the horse, testified that the animal showed no sign of having been abused. That wiped out the case against Miller.

GUEST IS MISSING AND JEWELRY GONE

WOMAN SAYS THAT SHE BELIEVES SHE WAS CHLOROFORMED.

Jacob Clark, a tailor, of 102 Broad street, Elizabeth, was searching in New York Saturday for Louis Sott, of Chicago, a supposed friend, who disappeared Saturday. When he disappared Mrs. Clark says she discovered that more than $400 worth of her jewelery had vanished The missing articles are a gold watch and chain, with four diamonds inserted in the watch cover; a diamond ring, her wedding ring, a diamond shirt stud, a diamond scarfpin, a gold ring with an agate stone, and a gold ring with an amethyst stone.

Sott, who is twenty-two years oid, was studying law in Chicago. Mr. Clark, who has a brother living in that city, met the young man last year in Chicago while he was on a visit there. He took a fancy to the law student, and invited im to visit his home in Elizabeth.

Sott arrived on Thursday afternoon. Mr. Clark did not notify the police at Elizabeth but started at once for New York city to put the police there on the ease. Both Mr. and Mrs. Clark believe that the young man has started back for Chicago. Mrs. Clark informed a reporter that se never slept so soundly in her life as she did Friday night, and did not awaken until nearly 6 o'clock Saturday mornin. She had a queer feeeling in her ead when she awakened and believes that she was chloroformed. The bureau where the jewelry was kept is in a corner of her sleeping apartment.

Too Swift for Tommie.

Thomas M. Muir, of The Daily Press staff, who is touring the west, met with an accident while in Chicago, last week, which put him to lots of trouble. He was enjoying a sightseeing trip of the Windy City aboard a cable car and not being accustomed to this means of street transit, fell off. As a result he was obliged to visit a tailor shop before proceeding on his journey.

A Split Trolley Rail.

Employees of the Public Service Corporation found a split trolley rail on West Front street, between New street and Plainfield avenue, last night, and a watchman was placed at that point to warn motormen to be careful in running over the damaged rail. This morning a gang of men was sent to the place and replaced the damaged rail with a new one.

Will Marry George L. Babcock.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, who has been spending the summer at Watch Hill, R. I., returned to Plainfield Saturday, en route for Alfred, N. Y., where tomorrow night he will officiate at the wedding of Miss Ruth Stillman, of that place, and George L. Babcock, of West Eighth street. A number of Plainfield relatives and friends will attend the ceremony.

Board Will Meet Thursday Night.

The Plainfield Board of Education will not meet tonight owing to the absence of the president, Dr. J. B. Probasco. The meeting will be held Thursday night.

TOMORROW'S PRIMARIES

Real Struggle in the First and Fourth Wards to Attract Attention.

THE POLLING PLACES

Where the Battle of Ballots Will Be Fought—Equivalent to An Election.

In two wards tomorrow the New Idea and regular Republican organizations will engage in the second battle of the war started a year ago. The fight will be in the First and Fourth wards. In the Second and Third, where the Colbyites were victorious a year ago, they have been left in undisputed possession of the field.

Interest in the wards where the voters will have to choose between two tickets. In the Fourth, the Colbyites have drawn their lines for a determined effort to wrest the ward from the leadership of Factory Inspector Andrew McCardell. They stand as the endorsers of Assemblyman Perkins in his effort to secure a renomination. They will make themselves felt, but those in a position to forecast say the regular forces have the victory in hand.

In the First ward, the New Ideaites do not appear to have gained much strength since last year, when their ticket was overwhelmed. They have opposed Isaac B. Hill to Councilman William L. Gloak, whom the organization has renamed. They have workers and will try to keep the organization men "on the job."

The primaries will open at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and votes will be received until 9 o'clock at night. Voters who have not registered may do so at the polling places while the primaries are open. The polling places will be located as follows:

FIRST WARD.

First District: At No. 174 East Front Street.

Second District: At No. 545 East Third Street.

SECOND WARD.

First District: At No. 327 Watchung Avenue.

Second District: At No. 699 South Avenue.

THIRD WARD.

First District: At the Casino, West Seventh Street.

Second District: At Neumann's barn, corner Spooner Avenue and Essex Street.

FOURTH WARD.

First District: At No. 204 West Second Street.

Second District: At No. 672 South Second Street.

Third District: At No. 921 West Third Street.

Werts Picks Child for Governor.

Morristown, Sept. 9.—Former Governor Werts was in this city yesterday talking politics among his friends and declared that Francis Child would be the Democratic nominess for Governor. Whether or not Mr. Werts came in the interest of Judge Child, he didn't say, but it was plain to those who talked with the ex-Governor, that he wanted the Morris County Democratic delegation to keep in mind that Mr. Child should receive its support at the State convention. Mr. Werts spent most of the day driving through the streets of the city and calling upon his old-time political associates. A prominent Democratic leader said last night that the Morris County delegation would support the candidacy of Mr. Child.

Mrs. Bridget Murray.

Mrs. Bridget Murray, widow of Patrick Murray, died yesterday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Smith, 435 Spooner avenue, with whom she lived, as a result of an accident about a month ago. At that time she fell down stairs and received a deep cut in the head, requiring fourteen stitches. The injury together with the nervous shock to the system caused death. Mrs. Murray was a native of Ireland, but had lived in this State fifty years. She is survived by four daughters and two sons. The funeral service will be held from the house tomorrow morning at 8.30 o'clock and from St. Mary's church at 9 o'clock. Burial in St. Mary's cemetery.

NEW IDEA'S ATTACK ON COUNCILMAN BUXTON

HE EXPLAINS HIS STAND ON SEWAGE PLANT LOCATION.

Campaign capital is being made by the New Idea people of the stand taken by Councilman Herbert Buxton, in opposing the installation of a garbage disposal plant in that ward for the purpose of defeating him for re-election to the Common Council. Mr. Buxton, who has been named as a candidate for ward councilman, admits the charge and explains his action by declaring that he did so for the the good of his constituents. The Fourth ward, he says, already has the poor farm, the isolation hospital and the sewage disposal beds and in his opinion that is enough for that section. His argument is that all these plants are of an undesirable nature and that to burden the ward further by placing within its territory a garbage plant would seriously effect realty values. Consequently, he declares that the last named plant should be located elsewhere. The report is also current that the New Idea leaders in other wards have arranged to have some of their men go over to the Fourth to help defeat Buxton.

Friends of Buxton say that there has never been a more zealous representative from the Fourth. During his incumbency, they say, he has succeeded in obtaining more improvements in the short space of time then has ever been acquired in a life period. Many streets have been macadamized through his efforts, numerous new lights and fire alarm boxes added. Furthermore, the district, it is declared was never so well attended to in the street sprinkling line as since he took office. For a long time he has endeavored to get West Third street macadamized between Madison avenue and Clinton avenue. In this he has met with strong opposition among the city fathers but he is sanguine that the improvement will be brought about at an early date.

CITY CAN NOW USE SEWER WORK MATERIAL

CLAIM OF FOUNDRY COMPANY AGAINST MORGAN SETTLED.

The attachment case of the Warren Foundry and Machine Company against Peter Morgan, the sewer contractor, in the Union County Circuit Court, has been settled, the plaintiff receiving its claim in full with interest to date. This has entailed a great deal of work and the settlement permits the city to go ahead and use the materials on the ground for the sewer work. Reed & Coddington represented the Warren Foundry and Machine Company.

There are two applying creditors, the Loizeaux Lumber Company, whose claim is about $1,700 and E. T. Hand, who has a claim of $109. They have received about 47 per cent on account of thir claims, and the balance is held pending the completion of the contract. The claim of the Warren Foundry and Machine Company was $7,600.

The question of settling the claims for labor remains unsettled. This is in the hand of the city treasurer and it will largely depend on the amount left after other claims are paid as to how much the Italian laborers will get. Codington & Swackhamer is looking after Mr. Hand's interests.

AGED CONTRACTOR DEAD

John Chandler Succumbs Following Third Stroke of Paralysis.

AT SEVENTY-TWO YEARS

Member of Mecca Temple—Survived By Four Daughters—Masonic Funeral.

John Chandler, aged seventy-two years, one of the best known citizens of Plainfield, died at 8:45 o'clock, last night, at his home, 508 Watchung avenue, following a third stroke of paralysis, earlier in the day, which rendered his entire body helpless. It was thirteen months ago that Mr. Chandler suffered the first stroke, affecting the right side. In July he had a second slight stroke, but yesterday's attack was so severe that he failed rapidly. He had been noticed by the family that during the past six months he gradually grew weaker and his death was only a question of a short time.

Mr. Chandler was born at Liberty Corner and removed to Plainfield when a young man, where he continued to reside, with the exception of a few years spent in the west. He learned the carpenter's trade when a young man and became on of the best known contractors in this part of the State. He built a great many of the business blocks and fine dwellings in the city and borough. The last big contract held by him was that of the Babcock building, Plainfield's largest business block. A few years ago the building was partially destroyed by fire and afterward rebuilt.

Especially in Masonic circles was Mr. Chandler well known. For many years he was active in the local lodges. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, being a member of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., Jerusalem Chapter, No. 24, R. A. M., Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., of this city; Mecca Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles Mystic Shrine, the Consistory and the Scottish Rite. He was a past officer in the local Masonic lodges and at times held offices in the State organization. He was also a member of the First M. E. church.

Surviving are four daughters, Miss Emma Chandler, Miss Lillian Chandler, Miss Fanny Chandler and Mrs. John F. Auten.

The arrangements have not been completed for the funeral, but it will no doubt be in charge of the local Masonic bodies.

Fisk Fake Story Victim.

Famished for a "beat," another paper on Saturday came out with a double-leaded story announcing the serious illness of Mayor Charles J. Fisk at Woodstock, Vt., and of the rush of Dr. B. VanD. Hedges to the bedside. The rumor was current on the streets on Saturday morning but its authenticity was denied by a member of the family. Displaying one of its usual characteristics, the paper in question however served its readers with one of its "features." The truth of the matter is that Mr. Fisk has a slight cold and the visit of Dr. Hedges had no connection with his illness, the physician merely accepting a social invitation to the Fisk family residence.

U. S. Uniform An Ad.

Wearing the full uniform of a regular officer of the United States army, not even omitting the sword, Lieut. Stanley Lewis, of the Arizona Rangers, popped into The Daily Press office with his autobiography setting forth his heroic achievements and winding up with the fact that the subject is an annex to a colored show giving a performance here today. The hero says he is a guest of the boss of the show.

Philip Vroom, principal of Public School, No. 2, Bayonne, spent Saturday with his sister, Miss Wilhelmina Vroom, of West Fifth street.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

Lew Kelly plays the "dope fiend" in Hap Ward's musical farce, "Not Yet But Soon," which will be seen here Thursday. Kelly is said to be one of the best of the many who have essayed this style of role. All his work is with "Casey," a purely imaginery being who is ever at his side.

William Collier, who will be seen at the local theatre in "Caught in the Rain," on September 13, was at once time a call boy at Daly's theatre. Mr. Collier has many reminiscences of Augustin Daly, who was the first manager to introduce into his plays real money, real doors, and, in cases where a dinner was required on the stage, real food was brought from the nearest restaurant. In these respects, Collier has followed carefully in Daly's footsteps.

"Red Feather," which will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre, September 14, is a reversion to straight opera, the music by Reginald De Koven, book by Charles Klein, and lyrics by Charles Emerson Cook. Mr. Cook's lyrics are singable and clever and Mr. De Koven's music is always satisfactory. There are at least a dozen musical numbers. For the prima donna role Manager Joseph M. Gaites has engaged Miss Cheridah Simpson.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE IS AGAINST COLBYITES.

Superintendent Burke Takes Exceptions to Their Attitude on Local Option.

State Superintendent J. Frank Burke, of the Anti-Saloon League of New Jersey, is opposing the "new dea" men now because of thier attitude on the local option question in the State. He is trying to get the co-operation of ministers throughout the State, and has been conducting his campaign by letter.

To this end a letter has been sent to the ministers throughout the State calling attention to Colby's Sunday local option plank, speaking of it as "the most vicious part of the Blohm bill, of unholy memory," and stating that the men "who stand for this thing should be rebuked at the primaries next Tuesday."

Another letter has been sent to every minister in Essex county asking them to preach on the political situation, giving a plain and emphatic statement of the case. Many replies have been received stating that the request will be complied with.

W. Maxwell Burke, of the league, stated Saturday that there was no ill feeling between Colby and the league although his brother had had a conference with the Senator and failed to convince him of the evil of local Sunday option. Burke said that the league would not support the "new idea" in the next election while it supported the local option plank. He said that the league considering getting up an independent ticket, but that this step has not yet been decided upon.

THE FORUM.

As to Mr. Iremonger.

"Editor, The Daily Press:

"Some publicity has been given to the story that Mr. E. E. Iremonger, who has represented the Second ward on the Republican City Executive Committee, had been turned down by the 'New Idea' organization. In justice to Mr. Iremonger and the 'New Idea' organization the actual facts should be given to the public.

"As a member of the Executive Committee of the Second Ward Branch of the 'New Idea' organization, I was present at a meeting of that body when the sub-committee on nominations made its report. Based on this report the Executive Committee made suggestions which were duly approved at a meeting of the ward branch. When it came to candidates for the city committee the sub-committee for nominations presented Mr. Iremonger's name but explained that he was out of town, that they did not have his address and had been told that he would not return until after the time when the nominating petitions had to be filed. There was a universal sentiment in favor of his return to the City Committee if he cared to go. Personally remembering that he had resigned from the Executive Committee of the Second Ward Branch owing to the pressure of other duties, I feared that we would have difficulty in persuading him to serve for another year. While we were discussing how to reach him and whether or not he would be willing to serve it was suggested that as certain members of the committee were appointed in any event it would be a simple matter to appoint him in the event he was willing to go. Then there would be no question about getting his acceptance on the nominating petition. The point was raised as to whether he would take any offence at being appointed instead of being elected but considering the circumstances, we did not for a minute think it possible.

"The attempt on the part of some of our good friends of different political ideas to spread the story that this was intended as a deliberate slight to Mr. Iremonger is ridiculous. I voice the sentiments of all the members who were present that evening when I say that it was furthest from our thoughts to do anything but fitly recognize Mr. Iremonger's services and recommend his return to the City Committee, provided he cared to go.

"CHARLES B. MORSE."

[For Mr. Morse's benefit it should be stated that had the coterie in the Second ward, which decided who shoud be nominated, made any effort to get Mr. Iremonger's address it could easily have been obtained. The address was published in the newspapers and could not only be gotten at their offices, but from Mr. Iremonger's friends, neighbors and business associates as well as from the secretary of the city committee. Mr. Morse possibly is not aware that the appointment of any additional members to the committee after the election is purely discretionary with that body and that it is far from certain that the New Idea nominating coterie could insure his appointment in such a manner. Before questioning the story, which is admitted by the members present when Mr. Iremonger resigned to be entirely correct, it might have been well for the author of the communication to have had a talk with Mr. Iremonger, himself. It is not too late now for him to get the capable ex-chairman's opinion of the affront offered him by his former political friends.—Editor.]

Bloomfield, N. J., Sept. 9.—The town council has accepted the fountain offered to this town by the Women's Christian Temperance Union. The fountain, which is quite ornamental, will be erected near the business centre.

EXHIBITION OF PAINTINGS BY MISS CAROLINE HALL

AT NEWPORT; INVITATIONS SENT OUT BY MRS. JULIA WARD HOWE.

Invitations to an exhibition of paintings by her granddaughter, Miss Caroline Minturn Hall, who is a daughter of Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, have been sent out by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe. The exhibition will be held at Newport, in the Dunstan house.

The paintings are all of unusual calibre. The portrait of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is an excellent likeness and attracts especial attention. The figure is life size and shown three quarters length and the portrait is characterized by great dignity of mien and bearing. The young artist received the inspiration for it when she saw her grandmother in the pulpit of Channing Church on Hospital Sunday, a year or two ago.

In the hallway hang four paintings, three of which have been exhibited in the salon of the Societe Nationale des Beaux Arts in Paris. The painting called "The Torrent" will be for many the most attractive of the collection, as it shows nature in one of her dark hours. The deep rich coloring of the tree, and the flash of the white torrent dashing between the combre sides of the land, have a real quality. In this same vein is "The Storm Cloud." One feels the threat of the coming storm in the cloud; the moment of silence before the tempest breaks is in the air. The picture takes a strong hold on the imagination.

Miss Hall took the first prize for drawing (silver medal) at the Delecluse Academy in 1903 and exhibited at the salon of the Societe Nationale des Beaux Arts in 1905 and 1906. To Angers, one of the best exhibitions of the French provinces, she sent by especial request her picture, "The Wooded Vale." This was also shown at the spring exhibition of the New York Academy of Fine Arts, and is now at the summer exhibition of the Worcester Art Museum, also by special invitation. Her work has been seen for several years at the exhibitions of the American Woman's Art Association of Paris. Miss Hall was secretary and treasurer and afterwards vice president of this organization. Wherever her work has been shown, whether in this country or in France, it has received commendations from the press. She expects to make her winter home in New York.

TESTING BULLS WITH AUTOS.

How Mexican Learned Whether Animal Was a Fighter.

That the automobile can be used with great success in determining the courage of young bulls intended for the bull ring has been demonstrated by Pedro Fernandez Somellera on his Isidro hacienda in this state. The novel experiment was made a few days ago with a 22-horsepower car, says a Guadalajara letter in the Mexican Herald. On all haciendas where fighting bulls are raised the young animals are "tested" with a view to determining their future fitness for the bull ring. Those that prove their courage are marked and left to grow up for future contests. Up to this time the tests have been conducted by men on horseback, armed with pikes like picadors. But Mr. Somellera, who is an enthusiasic motorist, this year decided on an innovation by introducing the motor car in place of the horsemen. Accordingly, after the young bulls had been herded into a large corral, the machine was driven into the inclosure. The occupants were armed with the usual pikes. The experiment proved an exciting success. Several of the young bulls charged the machine at mad speed, and it was only by clever driving that the car and its occupants were kept clear of the horns of the surprised and apparently indignant animals. The bulls that attempted to mix with the automobile have been credited with exceptional bravery, and they are expected to bring fame to the San Isidro hacienda by their future performances in the bull ring.

NOW THE PORCELAIN HOUSE.

New Invention May Make It a Building Material—Advantages.

The use of porcelain has long been known in China, but is now likely to make its appearance in western countries, and we are assured that the porcelain house is one of the possibilities of the near future. It is made practicable by the invention of a method of making large sheets of porcelain about an inch thick, which has the strength without the bulk of an ordinary brick built wall. Among its advantages is rapidity in building. With sheets of porcelain a good sized house can be constructed in a few days. It is damp proof, too, and is, of course, kept clean at the cost of very little labor. Colored glazes take the place of wallpaper, and pictures can be painted instead of being hung on the walls. Again, it is easily portable. A porcelain house can be taken down when the owner desires to move and reerected on another site. When it comes, these advantages, combined with its cheapness, are bound to make it popular.—Montreal Standard.

Smokestacks in Italy.

In Italy every important city, except only Rome, is now surrounded with a ring of chimneys in full smoke. The government exempts from taxation a "zone" of factories around each town. The traveler's first view of Venice as he crosses the lagoon comprises 13 smoking chimneys; the moon, seen from the Lido, rises from a filthily thickened horizon; Verona has a bouquet of active chimneys near her station; Brunnelleschi's dome at Florence and the quaint tower of her Palazzo Vecchio stand aloft against a horrible brown sky; the former orange gardens of Genoa are deep in dirt, grime and "fog" for the making of soap. When Rome, too, has lost her limpid horizon there is one Rome lover, at any rate, who will go there no more.

Nothing Else to Do.

Several teachers who were assigned to the city playgrounds were discussing the amusing and diversified ambitions of the tots in their charge as to what they hope to be when they "grow up." A teacher told of one little girl who in all sincerity gave her a reply that was not likely to make her vain. "Would you like to teach children when you become a young lady?" was the question. "No'm," was the empahtic reply. "What would you like to do?" persisted the teacher. "If I am pretty I'll be an actress," came the answer. "But suppose you are homely?" asked the teacher. "Well, then, of course I'll have to be a teacher," said the child.—Philadelphia Record.

Power of the Waves.

The power of waves, says M. Brounin, in La Nature, is the sum of two efforts, one dynamic and due to the orbital movement of the water particles, the other static, and dependent on the height of the center of gravity of the mass raised above its normal position. Theory and observation seem to show that the total power of waves is divided equally between these static and dynamic effects. If a body of water meets the wall of a structure there is a shock, and this is most violent at the water surface, diminising with the depth. At the moment of meeting jets of water rise sometimes to very great heights.

WOMAN FLAGS TRAIN; SAVE HUNDRED LIVES

RAILROAD CAMP COOK HEARS CRASH OF BRIDGE ABUTMENT AND WARNS ENGINEER.

St. Louis.—Through the quick wit and prompt action of a woman in flagging the Santa Fe's "California Limited" early the other morning at Hart, Mo., as the heavy train was about to plunge through a damaged trestle, the lives of over a hundred passengers were saved, and what might have proved one of the most disastrous railroad catastrophes of a number of years averted. The woman to whom so many owe their lives is Mrs. Minnie Hartushell of Ethel, Mo., a cook for a railroad camp near Hart.

According to passengers who were awakened soon after 3 o'clock in the morning to make the transfer across the creek at Hart the "California Limited" had left Kansas City in the evening nearly two hours late and was running at a high rate of speed to make up time into Chicago. At Hart a trestle of considerable length spans a small river at a height of about seventy feet. The tracks approach the trestle on a curve, thus obstructing the view of the engine men.

As the heavy train consisting of eight or nine Pullman cars with their sleeping occupants approached the bridge and was less than half a mile from it a lantern light was seen waving down the track by the engineer.

The first intimation that passengers had that all was not right was the grinding shock of the airbrakes. Thus aroused they hurried out of the coaches and found the engineer and trainmen conferring with a woman. She explained that the abutment which supported the trestle on the western side had fallen in and that the tracks and trestle work were merely hanging. Train officials and passengers who went ahead to the bridge found her statement true and shuddered at the thought of their near escape from a death plunge to the creek bottom.

Passengers saved by the woman formulated a set of resolutions, which were sent to the president of the road, asking for a proper reward for Mrs. Hartushell. A collection was taken up and presented to her.

GIRL RIDES WITH DEAD LOVER.

Discovers Corpse, Gets in Buggy with Body and Drives Aimlessly.

Detroit, Mich.—Crazed at finding her fiance, George Ott, sitting dead in his buggy, a quarter of a mile from the depot where he was to have met her, Miss Rose Hogan was found driving aimlessly in the buggy beside the corpse a short distance from the Ott home at Indian Town. She is threatened with a complete nervous collapse.

Miss Hogan had gone to visit her sweetheart's parents. Ott had written that he would meet her at the depot with a carriage and drive her to his parents' home—several miles out. When she alighted at the station there was no carriage in sight, and, after waiting a few minutes, the girl started to walk in the direction of the Ott farm, hoping to meet him on the way.

Some distance down the road she found the carriage motionless, the horse quietly standing and the young man sitting back in the seat with the lines in his hands. She called to him, and receiving no answer, came close to the buggy. Then she discovered that he was dead and that blood had streamed down his face from a bullet wound in his head.

The girl climbed into the buggy beside the dead man, took the lines and started to drive to the Ott home with the lifeless form. On the way the situation temporarily unbalanced her mind and when found by a farmer near her journey's end she was nearly out of her mind.

Kisses "Cute" Man; Fined $3.

Pittsburg.—Because she kissed a man who "looked just too cute" last evening, Mrs. M. Kierney, aged 30, black-eyed, rosy and dimpled, was fined $3 and costs by hard-hearted Mayor Coleman of McKeesport. Mrs Kierney blushingly paid the fine and promised that it wouldn't happen again. Mrs. Kierney was on a street car when she saw the "cute" man sitting in a corner. She said she couldn't resist the temptation of throwing her arms around his neck and kissing him.

The coatless man puts a careless arm
'Round the waist of the hatless girl.
While over the dustless, mudless roads
In a horseless wagon they whirl.
Like a leadless bullet from hammerless gun,
By smokeless powder driven,
They fly to taste the speechless joys
By endless union given.

The only luncheon his coinless purse
Affords to them the means
Is a tasteless meal of boneless cod,
With a dish of stringless beans.
He smokes his tobaccoless pipe,
And laughs a mirthless laugh
When papa tries to coax her back
By wireless telegraph.

Fond Mamma (brightening)—What's that?

Tactful Family Friend—He's just well red.—Baltimore American.

His Little Brown Peril.

Lampson—What do you think of the little brown peril.

Newlywed—Why, I think I'll have to get a cook after all.

Lampson—Get a cook? I'm referring to the Japanese, man!

Newlywed—Oh, pardon me. I was thinking of that plate of biscuits my wife put on the table this morning.—Judge.

BOB HAMPTON of PLACER

By RANDALL PARRISH AUTHOR OF "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING" "MY LADY OF THE NORTH" "HISTORIC ILLINOIS," ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY A.C. MCCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER IX.
At the Occidental.

Hampton slowly picked his way back through the darkness down the silent road, his only guide those dim yellow lights flickering in the distance.

It was Saturday night, and the mining town was already alive. The one long, irregular street was jammed with constantly moving figures, the numerous saloons ablaze, the pianos sounding noisily, the shuffling of feet in the crowded dance halls incessant.

Riot reigned unchecked, while the quiet, sleepy town of the afternoon blossomed under the flickering lights into a saturnalia of unlicensed pleasure, wherein the wages of sin were death.

Hampton pushed his way through the noisy throng with eyes ever watchful for the faces. His every motion was that of a man who had fully decided upon his course. He swung up the broad wooden steps of the Occidental and entered the barroom, which was crowded by jostling figures, the ever-moving mass as yet good-natured, for the night was young. At the lower end of the long, sloppy bar he stopped for a moment to nod to the fellow behind.

"Anything going on to-night worth while, Jim?" he questioned, quietly.

"Rather stiff game, they tell me, just started in the back room," was the genial reply. "Two eastern suckers, with Red Slavin sitting in."

The gambler passed on, pushing rather unceremoniously through the throng of perspiring humanity. The large front room upstairs was ablaze with lights, every game in full operation and surrounded by crowds of devotees. He walked directly toward the rear of the room. A thick, dingy red curtain hung there; he held back its heavy folds and stepped within the smaller apartment beyond.

Three men sat at the single table, cards in hand, and Hampton involuntarily whistled softly behind his teeth at the first glimpse of the money openly displayed before them. This was apparently not so bad for a starter, and his waning interest revived. A red-bearded giant, sitting so as to face the doorway, glanced up quickly at his entrance, his coarse mouth instantly taking on the semblance of a smile.

"Ah, Bob," he exclaimed, with an evident effort at cordiality; "been wondering if you wouldn't show up before the night was over. You're the very fellow to make this a four-handed affair, provided you carry sufficient stuff."

Hampton came easily forward into the full glow of the swinging oil lamp, his manner coolly deliberate, his face expressionless. "I feel no desire to intrude," he explained, quietly, watching the uplifted faces. "I believe I have never before met these gentlemen."

Slavin laughed, his great white fingers drumming the table.

"It is an acquaintance easily made," he said, "provided one can afford to trot in their class, for it is money that talks at this table to-night. Mr. Hampton, permit me to present Judge Hawes, of Denver, and Mr. Edgar Willis, president of the T. P. & R. I have no idea what they are doing in this hell-hole of a town, but they are dead-game sports, and I have been trying my best to amuse them while they're here."

Hampton bowed, instantly recognizing the names.

"Glad to assist," he murmured, sinking into a vacant chair. "What limit?"

"We have had no occasion to discuss that matter as yet," volunteered Hawes, sneeringly. "However, if you have scruples we might settle upon something within reason."

Hampton ran the undealt pack carelessly through his fingers, his lips smiling pleasantly. "Oh, never mind, if it chances to go above my pile I'll drop out. Meanwhile, I hardly believe there is any cause for you to be modest on my account."

The play opened quietly and with some restraint, the faces of the men remaining impassive, their watchful glances evidencing nothing either of success or failure. Hampton played with extreme caution for some time, his eyes studying keenly the others about the table, seeking some deeper understanding of the nature of his opponents, their strong and weak points, and whether or not there existed any prior arrangement between them. He was there for a purpose, a clearly defined purpose, and he felt no inclination to accept unnecessary chances with the fickle Goddess of Fortune. To one trained in the calm observation of small things, and long accustomed to weigh his adversaries with care, it was not extremely difficult to class the two strangers, and Hampton smiled softly on observing the size of the rolls rather ostentatiously exhibited by them. His satisfaction was in noways lessened by the sound of their voices, when incautiously raised in anger over some unfortunate play. He immediately recognized them as the identical individuals who had loudly and vainly protested over his occupancy of the best rooms at the hotel. He chuckled grimly.

But what bothered him particularly was Slavin. The cool, gray eyes, glancing with such apparent negligence across the cards in his hands, noted every slight movement of the red-bearded gambler, in expectation of detecting some sign of trickery, or some evidence that he had been selected by this precious trio for the purpose of easy plucking. Knavery was Slavin's style, but apparently he was now playing a straight game, no doubt realizing clearly, behind his impassive mask of a face, the utter futility of seeking to outwit one of Hampton's enviable reputation.

It was, unquestionably, a fairly fought four-handed battle, and at last, thoroughly convinced of this, Hampton settled quietly down, prepared to play out his game. The stakes grew steadily larger. Several times drinks were served, but Hampton contented himself with a gulp of water, always gripping an unlighted cigar between his teeth. He was playing now with apparent recklessness, never hesitating over a card, his eye as watchful as that of a hawk, his betting quick, confident, audacious. The contagion of his spirit seemed to affect the others, to force them into desperate wagers. The perspiration was beading Slavin's forehead, and now and then an oath burst unrestrained from his hairy lips. Hawes and Willis sat white-faced, bent forward anxiously over the table, their fingers shaking as they handled the fateful cards, but Hampton played without perceptible tremor, his utterances few and monosyllabic, his calm face betraying not the faintest emotion.

And he was steadily winning. Occasionally some other hand drew in the growing stock of gold and bank notes, but not often enough to offset those continued gains that began to heap up in such an alluring pile upon his portion of the table. The lookers-on who had come in began to observe this, and gathered more closely about his chair, fascinated by the luck with which the cards came floating into his hands, the cool judgment of his critical plays, the reckless abandon with which he forced success. Suddenly he forced the fight to a finish. The opportunity came in a jack-pot which Hawes had opened. The betting began with a cool thousand. Then Hampton's turn came. Without drawing, his cards yet lying downward before him on the board, his calm features as immovable as the Sphinx, he quietly pushed his whole accumulated pile to the center, named the sum, and leaned back in his chair, his eyes cold, impassive. Hawes threw down his hand, wiping his streaming face with his handkerchief; Willis counted his remaining roll, hesitated, looked again at the faces of his cards, flung aside two, drawing to fill, and called loudly for a show-down, his eyes protruding. Slavin, cursing fiercely under his red beard, having drawn one card, his perplexed face instantly brightening as he glanced at it, went back into his hip pocket for every cent he had, and added his profane demand for a chance at the money.

A fortune rested on the table, a fortune the ownership of which was to be decided in a single moment, and by the movement of a hand. Willis was gasping, his whole body quivering; Slavin was watching Hampton's hands as a cat does a mouse, his thick lips parted, his fingers twitching nervously. The latter smiled grimly, his motion deliberate, his eyes never wavering. Slowly, one by one, he turned up his cards, never even deigning to glance downward, his entire manner that of unstudied indifference. One—two—three. Willis uttered a snarl like a stricken wild beastt, and sank back in his chair, his eyes closed, his cheeks ghastly. Four. Slavin brought down his great clenched first with a crash on the table, a string of oaths bursting unrestrained from his lips. Five. Hampton, never stirring a muscle, sat there like a statue, watching. His right hand kept hidden beneath the table, with his left he quietly drew in the stack of bills and coin, pushing the stuff heedlessly into the side pocket of his coat, his gaze never once wandering from those stricken faces fronting him. Then he softly pushed back his chair and stood erect. Willis never moved, but Slavin rose unsteadily to his feet, gripping the table fiercely with both hands.

"Gentlemen," said Hampton, gravely, his clear voice sounding like the sudden peal of a bell, "I can only thank you for your courtesy in this matter, and bid you all good-night. However, before I go it may be of some interest for me to say that I have played my last game."

Somebody laughed sarcastically, a harsh, hateful laugh. The speaker whirled, took one step forward; there was the flash of an extended arm, a dull crunch, and Red Slavin went crashing backward against the wall. As he gazed up, dazed and bewildered, from the floor, the lights glimmered along a blue-steel barrel.

"Not a move, you red brute," and Hampton spurned him contemptuously with his heel. "This is no variety show, and your laughter was in poor taste. However, if you feel particularly hilarious to-night I'll give you another chance. I said this was my last game; I'll repeat it—this was my last game! Now, damn you! if you feel like it, laugh!"

He swept the circle of excited faces, his eyes glowing like two diamonds, his thin lips compressed into a single straight line.

"Mr. Slavin appears to have lost his previous sense of humor," he remarked, calmly. "I will now make my statement for the third time—this was my last game. Perhaps some of you gentlemen also may discover this to be amusing."

The heavy, strained breathing of the motionless crowd was his only answer, and a half smile of bitter contempt curled Hampton's lips, as he swept over them a last defiant glance.

"Not quite so humorous as it seemed to be at first, I reckon," he commented, dryly. "Slavin," and he prodded the red giant once more with his foot, "I'm going out; if you make any attempt to leave this room within the next five minutes I'll kill you in your tracks, as I would a mad dog. You stacked cards twice to-night, but the last time I beat you fairly at your own game."

He held aside the heavy curtains with his left hand and backed slowly out facing them, the deadly revolver shining ominously in the other. Not a man moved Slavin glowered at him from the floor, an impotent curse upon his lips. Then the red drapery fell.

While the shadows of the long night still hung over the valley, Naida, tossing restlessly upon her strange bed within the humble yellow house at the fork of the trails, was aroused to wakefulness by the pounding of a horse's hoofs on the plank bridge spanning the creek. She drew aside the curtain and looked out, shading her eyes to see clearer through the poor glass. All she perceived was a somewhat deeper smudge when the rider swept rapidly past, horse and man a shapeless shadow. Three hours later she awoke again, this time to the full glare of day, and to the remembrance that she was now facing a new life. As she lay there thinking, her eyes troubled but tearless, far away on the sun-kissed uplands Hampton was spurring forward his horse, already beginning to exhibit signs of weariness.

CHAPTER X.
The Arrival of Miss Spencer.

Miss Phoebe Spencer, the pioneer school teacher of Glencaid, came direct from the far east, her starting point some little junction place back in Vermont, although she proudly named Boston as her home, having once visited in that metropolis for three delicious weeks. She was of an ardent, impressionable nature. Her mind was nutured upon eastern conceptions of our common country, her imagination aglow with weird tales of the frontier, and her bright eyes perceived the vivid coloring of romance in each prosaic object west of the tawny Missouri. All appeared so different from that established life to which she had grown accustomed,—the people, the country, the picturesque language,—while her brain so teemed with lurid pictures of border experiences and heroes as to reveal romantic possibilities everywhere. As her eager eyes traced the serrated peaks of a snow-clad mountain range, her heart throbbed with anticipation of wonders yet to come. Homesickness was a thing undreamed of; her active brain responded to each new impression.

She sat comfortatbly ensconced in the back seat of the old, battered red coach, surrounded by cushions for protection from continual bouncing, as the Jehu in charge urged his restive mules down the desolate valley of the Bear Water. Her cheeks were flushed, her wide-open eyes filled with questioning, her pale fluffy hair frolicking with the breeze, as pretty a picture of young womanhood as any one could wish to see. Nor was she unaware of this fact. During the final stage of her journey she had found two congenial souls, sufficiently picturesque to harmonize with her ideas of wild western romance.

"Now, Damn You! If You Feel Like It, Laugh."

These two men were lolling in the less comfortable seat opposite, secretly longing for a quiet smoke outside, yet neither willing to desert this eastern divinity to his rival. The big fellow, his arm run carelessly through the leather sling, his bare head projecting half out of the open window, was Jack Moffat, half-owner of the "Golden Rule," and enjoying a well-earned reputation as the most ornate and artistic liar in the territory. For two hours he had been exercising his talent to the full, and merely paused now in search of some fresh inspiration, holding in supreme and silent contempt the rather feeble imitations of his less-gifted companion.

The fly in the ointment of this long day's ride, the third party, whose undesirable presence and personal knowledge of Mr. Moffat's past career rather seriously interfered with the latter's flights of imagination, was William McNeil, foreman of the "Bar V" ranch over on Sinsiniwa creek. McNeil was not much of a talker, having an impediment in his speech, and being a trifle bashful in the presence of a lady. But he caught the eye,—a slenderly built, reckless fellow, smoothly shaven, with a strong chin and bright laughing eyes,—and as he lolled carelessly back in his bearskin "chaps" and wide-brimmed sombrero, occasionally throwing in some cool, insinuating comment regarding Moffat's recitals, the latter experienced a strong inclination to heave him overboard. The slight hardening of McNeil's eyes at such moments had thus far served, however, as sufficient restraint, while the unobservant Miss Spencer, unaware of the silent duel thus being conducted in her very presence, divided her undisguised admiration, playing havoc with the susceptible heart of each, and all unconsciously laying the foundations for future trouble.

"Why, how truly remarkable!" she exclaimed, her cheeks glowing. "It's all so different from the east; heroism seems to be in the very air of this country, and your adventure was so very unusual. Don't you think so, Mr. McNeil?"

The silent foreman hitched himself suddenly upright, his face unusually solemn. "Why—eh—yes, miss—you might—eh—say that. He," with a flip of his hand toward the other, "eh—reminds me—of—eh—an old friend."

"Indeed? How extremely interesting!" eagerly scenting a new story. "Please tell me who it was, Mr. McNeil."

"Oh—eh—knew him when I was a boy—eh—Munchausen."

Mr. Moffat drew in his head violently, with an exclamation nearly profane, yet before he could speak Miss Spencer intervened.

"Munchausen! Why, Mr. McNeil, you surely do not intend to question the truth of Mr. Moffat's narrative?"

The foreman's eyes twinkled humorously, but the lines of his face remained calmly impassive. "My—eh—reference," he explained, gravely, "was—eh—entirely to the—eh—local color, the—eh—expert touches."

"Oh!"

"Yes, miss. It's—eh—bad taste out here to—eh—doubt anybody's word—eh—publicly."

Moffat stirred uneasily, his hand flung behind him, but McNeil was gazing into the lady's fair face, apparently unconscious of any other presence.

"But all this time you have not favored me with any of your own adventures, Mr. McNeil. I am very sure you must have had hundreds out on these wide plains."

The somewhat embarrassed foreman shook his head discouragingly.

"Oh, but I just know you have, only you are so modest about recounting them. Now, that scar just under your hair—really it is not at all unbecoming—surely that reveals a story. Was it caused by an Indian arrow?"

McNeil crossed his legs, and wiped his damp forehead with the back of his hand. "Hoof of a damn pack-mule," he explained, forgetting himself. "The—eh—cuss lifted me ten feet."

Moffat laughed hoarsely, but as the foreman straightened up quickly, the amazed girl joined happily in, and his own face instantly exhibited the contagion.

"Ain't much—eh—ever happens out on a ranch," he said, doubtfully, "except dodgin' steers, and—eh—bustin' broncoes."

Moffat had his head craned out of the window once more, in an apparent determination to ignore all further frivolous remarks. Suddenly he pointed directly ahead.

"There's Glencaid now, Miss Spencer," he said, cheerfully. "That's the spire of the new Presbyterian church sticking up above the ridge."

"Oh, indeed! How glad I am to be here safe at last!"

"How—eh—did you happen to—eh—recognize the church?" asked Mr. McNeil with evident admiration. "You—eh—can't see it from the saloon."

Moffat disdained reply, and the lurching stage rolled rapidly down the valley, the mules now lashed into a wild gallop to the noisy accompaniment of the driver's whip.

The hoofs clattered across the narrow bridge, and, with a sudden swing, all came to a sharp stand, amid a cloud of dust before a naked yellow house.

"Here's where you get out, miss," announced the Jehu, leaning down from his seat to peer within. "This yere is the Herndon shebang."

The gentlemen inside assisted Miss Spencer to descend in safety to the weed-bordered walk, where she stood shaking her ruffled plumage into shape, and giving directions regarding her luggage. Then the two gentlemen emerged, Moffat bearing a gripcase, a handbox, and a basket, while McNeil supported a shawl-strap and a small trunk. Thus decorated they meekly followed her lead up the narrow path toward the front door. The latter opened suddenly, and Mrs. Herndon bounced forth with vociferous welcome.

"Why, Phoebe Spencer, and have you really come! I didn't expect you'd get along before next week. Oh, this seems too nice to see you again; almost as good as going home to Vermont. You must be completely tired out."

"Dear Aunt Lydia; of course I'm glad to be here. But I'm not in the least tired. I've had such a delightful trip." She glanced around smilingly upon her perspiring cavaliers. "Oh, put those things down, gentlemen—anywhere there on the grass; they can be carried in later. It was so kind of you both."

"Hey, there!" sang out the driver, growing impatient, "if you two gents are aimin' to go down town with this outfit, you'd better be pilin' in lively, fer I can't stay here all day."

Moffat glanced furtively aside at McNeil, only to discover that individual quietly seated on the trunk. He promptly dropped his own grip.

"Drive on with your butcher's cart," he called out spitefully. "I reckon it's no special honor to ride to town."

The pleasantly smiling young woman glanced from one to the other, her eyes fairly dancing, as the lumbering coach disappeared through the red dust.

"How very nice of you to remain," she exclaimed. "Aunt Lydia, I am so anxious for you to meet my friends, Mr. Moffat and Mr. McNeil. They have been so thoughtful and entertaining all the way up the Bear Water, and they explained so many things that I did not understand."

She swept impulsively down toward them, both hands extended, the bright glances of her eyes bestowed impartially.

"I cannot invite you to come into the house now," she exclaimed, sweetly, "for I am almost like a stranger here myself, but I do hope you will both of you call. I shall be so very lonely at first, and you are my earliest acquaintances. You will promise, won't you?"

McNeil bowed, painfully clearing his throat, but Moffat succeeded in expressing his pleasure with a well-rounded sentence.

"I felt sure you would. But now I must really say good by for this time and go in with Aunt Lydia. I know I must be getting horribly burned out here in this hot sun. I shall always be so grateful to you both."

And the two radiant knights walked together toward the road, neither uttering a word.

CHAPTER XI.
Becoming Acquainted.

Once within the cool shadows of the living-room, Mrs. Herndon again bethought herself to kiss her niece in a fresh glow of welcome, while the latter sank into a convenient rocker and began enthusiastically expressing her unbounded enjoyment of the west, and of the impressions gathered during her journey. Suddenly the elder woman glanced about and exclaimed, laughingly, "Why, I had completely forgotten. You have not yet met your room-mate. Come out here, Naida; this is my niece, Phoebe Spencer."

The girl thus addressed advanced, a slender, graceful figure dressed in white, and extended her hand shyly. Miss Spencer clasped it warmly, her eyes upon the flushed, winsome face.

"And is this Naida Gillis!" she cried. "I am so delighted that you are still here, and that we are to be together. Aunt Lydia has written so much about you that I feel as if we must have known each other for years. Why, how pretty you are!"

Naida's cheeks were burning, and her eyes fell, but she had never yet succeeded in conquering the blunt independence of her speech. "Nobody else ever says so," she said, uneasily. "Perhaps it's the light."

Miss Spencer turned her about so as to face the window. "Well, you are," she announced, decisively. "I guess I know; you've got magnificent hair, and your eyes are perfectly wonderful. You just don't fix yourself up right; Aunt Lydia never did have any taste in such things, but I'll make a new girl out of you. Let's go upstairs; I'm simply dying to see our room, and get some of my dresses unpacked. They must look perfect frights by this time."

They came down perhaps an hour later, hand in hand, and chattering like old friends. The shades of early evening were already falling across the valley. Herndon had returned home from his day's work, and had brought with him Rev. Howard Wynkoop for supper. Miss Spencer viewed the young man with approval, and immediately became more than usually vivacious in recounting the incidents of her long journey, together with her early impressions of the western country. Mr. Wynkoop responded with an interest far from being assumed.

"I have found it all so strange, so unique, Mr. Wynkoop," she explained. "The country is like a new world to me, and the people do not seem at all like those of the east. They lead such a wild, untrammeled life. Everything about seems to exhale the spirit of romance; don't you find it so?"

He smiled at her enthusiasm, his glance of undisguised admiration on her face. "I certainly recall some such earlier conception," he admitted. "Those just arriving from the environment of an older civilization perceive merely the picturesque elements; but my later experiences have been decidedly prosaic."

"Why, Mr. Wynkoop! how could they be? Your work is heroic. It is perfectly grand! Why, the very men I met seem to yield me a broader conception of life and duty; they are so brave, so modest, so active. Is—is Mr. Moffat a member of your church?"

The minister cleared his throat, his cheeks reddening. "Mr. Moffat? Ah, no; not exactly. Do you mean the mine-owner, Jack Moffat?"

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. J. S. Zelie, of Park avenue, who have been spending the summer abroad, are now on their way home. Dr. Zelie will occupy his pulpit in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, on Sunday.

CLINTON AVE. IS DOWNED

After Winning 16 Straight Local Team is Defeated by Scotch Plains.

BY JOHNSON'S WORK

Westfield Pitcher Does Great Work —The Score of the Game Was Six to Three.

With Johnson, of Westfield, in the box, Scotch Plains won from Clinton Avenue in an exhibition game at Cresent Oval, Saturday afternoon. The score was 6 to 3. It was Clinton Avenue's first defeat in seventeen games.

Things broke right for the suburbanites all through the game. They got three hits less than the West Enders, and made one more error, but they wrenched hits at opportune times, and the Clinton Avenue errors were of much help. And there were more than a few times when they fielded superbly, choking off the hustling Clinton Avenues on their merits.

They belted the ball hard in the first go, and their luck started coincident with the whacking. Baldwin hit to right and the ball rolled in a perverse fashion that gave him room for a gallop to second. Mehaffey followed him with a bang that stretched itself in the same lucky fashion. Two runs were scored before the inning closed, and they landed another in the third.

In the latter inning Baldwin collided with Jack Martin at second and put the little shortstop out. Jack woke up after five minutes of dreaming, composedly chewing his wad of gum, and declared himself fit to go back in the game after an inning of recuperation. Just to show that a good man cannot be permanently held down he banged out two doubles. He retired in the eighth to get back a little more of his lost wind.

Clinton Avenue scored one run in the fourth, but the suburbanites added two to their tallies in the next session, and the Plainfielders couldn't overhaul them. They made one or two bids for a better grip on the game, but the hits necessary to the clinch were not poled out.

The score:

Somerville Defeats Champions.

With Ray Egner, the famous twirler from Trenton, in the box, the West Ends, of Somerville, defeated the High Bridge team, Saturday afternoon. The feat of winning from the champions of Hunterdon county was largely due to the fine work of Egner. The contest went eleven innings and Somerville won by a score of 2 to 1. Egner fanned fourteen batsmen and he allowed but two hits. The West Ends got four hits off of Kraft.

Miss Ethel Clarkson, of Orchard place, is visiting relatives at Westfield.

Loses Well Played Game With Bound Brook on Latter's Grounds.

SCORE, TWO TO ONE

Both Nines Did Great Fielding—Shaw Showed Up Well At Short-stop.

The Y. M. C. A. nine lost a fast, close game to Bound Brook in the canal village Saturday. The score was 2 to 1 and the struggle was as pretty and as earnest as the figures indicate. The Laurels had a relapse to the form they used to dream about, and garnered a brilliant victory.

It was the best league game Bound Brook has witnessed. Y. M. C. A. played fast and hard, but the plucky youngsters in the other camp would not give way and beat back the invaders at every threatening move.

Both sides fielded to the limit. There were twenty-seven assists and only three miscues. Shaw, at shortfield, went after everything within reach and got away with stops that looked good enough to make big leaguers take notice, and Jim Scott, in center, made hair-raising catches of line drives that had all the earmarks of extra-base welts. It was such a lovely game all the way through that the Y. M. C. A. players chortled over it as much as if they had won. As a matter of fast, when nines play for the sport's sake and not for revenue, it really doesn't matter who wins a game like this Bound Brook affair. Still it is a grain of additional pleasure to get away with the long end of the score, and it is up to us at this juncture to raise our hats gracefully to the Laurels. We have treated them with levity at times and may do it again, but we know them for good sports with a following of the kind it is a pleasure to have in the stands, and we say that as swiftly as we give way to the josh opening when it offers itself.

The Laurels scored their two runs before Y. M. C. A. tallied. In the fourth Harney hit to right, and advanced on sacrifices by Grimes and Bollinger. With two strikes on Hawk, Schoonmaker dropped a ball and Harney raced in. Hawk fanned. In the seventh, with one down, Hawk scratched his way to first. Shaw sacrificed, and Bowlby rose to the occasion with a smashing two-bagger. Matthews struck out.

Y. M. C. A. scored in the next inning. Hubbard made first on an error, and R. Schoonmaker laced out a three-bagger. Hubbard, winded, failed at the plate, but Craig scored Schoonmaker with a sacrifice, third to first. Pond went out by the same route.

ROME AND HER SKEETER

Judge Fort Tells How Ancient City Was Rid of Her Mosquitoes.

WAGED MALARIA WAR

Employers Must Give Quinine to Employes or Be Fined—The Methods Enforced in That Capitol.

Newark, Sept. 9.—Among the interesting mementoes of his trip abroad, brought back by Justice J. Franklin Fort, is a pamphlet describing the hygienic campaign against mosquitoes and malaria which has been successfully waged in Rome during the past ten years. The author of the pamphlet is Dr. Luigi Egidi, a graduate of the University of Rome and a practising physician in that city.

Dealing principally with the campaign against malaria, in which the mosquitoes which plagued the inhabitants of the city for many generations were exterminated as a side issue, Dr. Egidi says:

"On December 23, 1900, a law was passed, providing for what is known as Government quinine. It is a well known fact that quinine is a specific remedy against malaria. Thanks to the legislative enactment providing for the furnishing of quinine by the Government, the absolute good quality and purity of this drug is guaranteed. This quinine is sold at a reasonable price, so as to enable the poorest to procure it; and it is to me found everywhere, even in the r motest localities where there are no chemists.

"It has been demonstrated that when persons living in malarial-infected regions have taken, during the dangerous season of the year, a single daily dose of quinine, they have been almost invariably immune from the disease. For this reason the law of November 2, 1901, obliges all employers, municipal authorities, corporations, contractors, landowners, etc., to distribute quinine gratis to people working or living in malarial regions both as a prophylactic and curative remedy. The law prescribes a fine, ranging from 100 to 1,000 lire ($20 to $200) for the non-observance of this rule, and also for indemnities to workmen or employes in case of death from malignant fever where culpable negligence on the part of the employer in failing to furnish the quinine can be shown.

"Lastly the law compels landowners in malarious territories to remove all the local causes of the infection, by draining the stagnant water or filling in the ditches, which it is well known are the breeding grounds for the infection-distributing insects."

Justice Fort says that while the number of deaths due to malarial fevers was approximately 12,000 ten years ago, there was not a single death from fever in the city of Rome last year.

Practically the same methods of ridding Rome of malaria and mosquitoes as those which are described above and adopted throughout rural Italy, prevail. Dr. Luigi, in his pamphlet, assures the reader that conditions have changed since Hawthorne published in his "Marble Fawn" years ago, that "if you come hither in summer and stray through these glades in the golden sunset, fever walks arm in arm with you and death awaits you at the end of the dim vista," and affirms that Rome is now non-malarial.

This was due largely, he goes on to state, to the fact that stagnant pools, breeding places of mosquitoes which carried the disease, have been filled in and the creation of further nuisances of this character prohibited by law.

Deathbed Will.

John C. Morris, who died at his home in Piscataway township on Wednesday afternoon, August 21, made his will on his death bed but a short time before he died. Mr. Morris is reputed to have been wealthy, his estate being variously estimated as worth from $50,000 to $100,000. He leaves it to be divided equally among his children and grand-child, share and share alike.

Return from Trip to Ireland.

Thomas Callahan, of Richmond street, and John Walsh, of Madison avenue, who recently visited their native home in Ireland for the first time since they left there forty years ago, reached home on Friday on the Cedric, the same boat they went to Ireland no. When they originally came to America forty years ago it was on a dare, and their return home was under similar circumstances. They had a delightful trip and greatly enjoyed the visit among their many relatives and friends.

An Excellent Performance.

The audience at the New Plainfield theatre Saturday night witnessed an excellent performance in every way. In "A Modern Lady Godiva" Miss Amelia Bingham has found a vehicle that serves to bring out her talents to a noteworthy degree, and her support is of the best. The play was deserving of a better house, and it probably would have had it if the season were older.

Shearer Still Unconscious.

The condition of Lester Shearer, the nineteen-year-old delivery wagon driver, who was injured when a B. & O. flier struck his rig at the Prospect avenue, Dunellen, Friday night, was reported to be unchanged at the hospital this afternoon. He has shown no signs of regaining consciousness, and the doctors are still doubtful of saving his life.

MAKER OF CHAUFFEURS

Clarence B. Brokaw Will Continue to Lecture at Auto School.

RETIRES AS PRINCIPAL

What the West Side Y. M. C. A. Institution Has Done to Lead the Way in Educating Drivers of Motor Vehicles.

Although he has retired as principal of the automobile school conducted by the West Side branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, New York, Clarence B. Brokaw, formerly of this city and well known here, will continue as lecturer. His brother, H. C. Brokaw, has taken his place as head of the school. The former principal conducted the Y. M. C. A. auto school here. Clarence Brokaw has had a large share in developing motoring both as a pleasure and as a business on the lines that make for its best advancement.

Three years ago, when the West Side Young Men's Christian Association opened its automobile school, the first in New York, practically the first in the country that attempted to give systematic and thorough instruction in automobile mechanics and the driving of motor vehicles, the plan was looked upon by many as an interesting experiment. Even the educational directors of the association were, for a time, in doubt as to the success of the scheme. Within a wonderfully short time the school passed its experimental stage. Despite the criticisms of numerous garage managers and chauffeurs, whose position at the wheel of a high-priced car had been brought about through more or less rapid evolution from the ordinary shop mechanic, the principles of the school were recognized as being on the right track to educate men who should possess a perfect knowledge of the automobile in every particular. Within the past three years automobile schools have been established in nearly all the large cities of the country, and although the difficulties of the chauffeur problem are by no means entirely solved, these schools have accomplished a great deal toward turning out an experienced class of men for the management of motor cars.

Last Wednesday night, with some changes in its curriculum and with over 150 men enrolled for the opening classes, the first session of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association school for the fourth year was commenced. Last year the school gave instruction to 817 men. The record of the three years shows an enrollment of nearly 1,800 students. In December, 1905, another large class was formed.

The success of the schools has developed a number of interesting facts. They have enlarged the demand among well-to-do owners for practical knowledge of the mechanism, running and maintenance of their cars, and in the School of Automobile Engineer many women have taken the full course, and are now as expert operators of small cars as any professional chauffeurs. Many owners of cars have also sent their coachmen, and these men, by their well-known reliability in driving horses, have proved highly efficient operators of motor vehicles. Among those who have had their coachmen instructed in automobiling are Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Russell Sage, Henry H. Rogers, Miss Anna Sands, E. D. Morgan, Mrs. W. Ziegler, Richard Croker, Jr., and T. H. Thomas. Employment bureaus are also maintained, and chauffeurs who have passed the required examination and hold the certificate of the school are recommended as trustworthy men.

Among the new things added to the Young Men's Christian Association course this year is a physical examination, testing those who desire it for sight, hearing and other senses. It is coming to be recognized that, other things being equal, the best chauffeurs will naturally be the man in the best physical condition and a man who is sound in seeing and hearing will be more liable to prevent accidents and know how to act promptly in an emergency.

Six classes have been started for the opening sessions of the Young Men's Christian Association school this season. Formerly the classes were of fourteen weeks' duration, but all except one have been reduced this year to eight weeks, the same number of hours, however being required, some taking the instruction in the Young Men's Christian Association garage in the morning and others in the evening. Two sessions a week of three hours each are required in practical shop work, and once a week there is a general lecture. In addition each man has several hours of private instruction in road work.

KEPT MARRIAGE SECRET

William VanSickle Says He and Miss Mason Were Wedded Five Months Ago.

BY A NEWARK PASTOR

Pretty Bride is Seventeen and Groom Twenty.—Her Parents Are Very Angry.

Announcement was made to day of the secret marriage of Miss Alice Mason, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Mason, of Manning avenue, and William Van Sickle, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Van Sickle, of East Third street. The couple say that they were married on April 7 last at the home of Rev. C. E. Scudder in Newark. An investigation fails to show that there is any pastor of that name in Newark.

The bride is but seventeen years old while her husband is three years her senior. He is employed in one of the local machine shops. The girl wife is exceptionally pretty. Her parents not knowing of her intention to be married were greatly displeased and it is said, at first refused to extend the parental blessing. The groom's parents while not altogether pleased with the way in which the marriage was performed offered no serious objections.

The couple will reside with the groom's aunt, Miss Adele Randolph, of East Third street, until he has completed the serving of his time at his trade.

CO. K HAS FIVE EXPERT MARKSMEN IN ITS RANKS

PLAINFIELD BOYS WON TROPHY AND GOLD MEDAL.

As a result of the season's practice on the State range at Sea Girt, Company K, of this city, will occupy second position in the Second Regiment. The company won the Williams trophy, while Sergeant Hort captured the Saulter medal at 200, 300, 500 and 600 yards, with a total score of 224. Out of the company membership, five qualified as experts, three as sharpshooters and thirty-one as marksmen.

Those who qualified as experts were Captain H. B. Kitchell, Lieutenant A. I. Littell, Sergeants Hort, Trancbard and Phillips. Those who qualified as sharpshooters were Lieutenant Charles Peterson, Sergeant George Apgar and Private Slingland. The marksmen are as follows:

Sergeants Bilyeu and Pearson, Corporals Niles, De Camp, Sampson, Manning, Winter, Privates Benbrook, Bell, Clark, Dayton, Douglass, Dow, Hartpence, Hixon, Lambert, Mundy, Pearsall, Peterson, Rothberg, Seaman, Smith and Vail.

Sergeant Farr, of Princeton, was the winner of the Collins medal, and Corporal Bergen, also of Princeton, won the Mack trophy.

SERVANT WINS CASE.

Court Decides She Is Entitled to Higher Wage Claimed.

Judge Swife, of Elizabeth, sat in the District Court this morning in place of Judge Newton, who is traveling in the South. There was only one contested case, an action on contract by Elizabeth Deakyn, a servant, against John W. Mundy and Esther Mundy, his wife. She sued for $200, wages claimed, and was awarded $180.

The testimony as to the amount of work required of her and the general nature of her duties convinced the court that the higher figure was the right one. John P. Owens represented the plaintiff. Isaac P. Runyon was lawyer for the losers.

Samuel Kellogg.

Samuel Kellogg, a printer, remembered by many in this city as a compositor in The Daily Press plant, died in New York on Sunday. The news of his death was received in a brief note, and details are lacking. The funeral will be held today, the body being buried in Mt. Hope cemetery, New York. He was 48 years old. Mr. Kellogg suffered with a serious illness some months ago, spending a long period in a hospital in New York. He had many friends in his city. His mother died here not long ago.

SCHOOLS STARTED TODAY

Teachers and Pupils on Hand When Doors Opened for Fall Term.

TOTAL ENROLLMENTS

Supt. Krebs Reports 946 in Borough The Hebrew Holiday Has Some Effect On Attendance.

Hesitating between their old coldness toward the three Rs and the fretwork with which they have become embellished and a desire to taste the novelty of their new classes, the pupils of the public schools returned to the classrooms this morning, after three months and a half of vacation. From seashore, mountains and "back home" a full corps of teachers came to take their places at the head of the juvenile battalions. Class work was shaped swiftly, and by tomorrow the little army of learners will find itself almost in full swing. Before the end of the week they will be in the grip of the course, and working hardily up the slope toward the heights.

Registration figures from the city schools could not be obtained today. Superintendent Maxson, busy with desk work at his office, is never able to get around to the schools on the first day until late, if at all, and the teachers are too busy arranging the routine of the classes, as Dr. Maxson said this morning, to "count noses." What the registration is will be known and announced tomorrow. An increase oved last year's total is certain.

It was announced this morning that Miss Charlotte Stillman, one of the Irving school teachers, is unable to return on account of ill health. She was away part of last year on account of ill health. Her place is filled by Miss Partridge, of Adams, Mass.

The Whittier school did not remain open long. The cleaners had not completed oiling the floor, the last step in the repair work, and the pupils were dismissed. The school will open tomorrow.

The North Plainfield public schools reopened this morning for the fall and winter terms, under most favorable circumstances. During the vacation period the Somerset and Watchung schools have been thoroughly overhauled and put in first-class condition.

The official enrollment reported by Superintendent Krebs was 946 at the opening of school. This is fifteen less than last year on the opening day, but Mr. Krebs believes it will exceed that in a few days as it is known that a number of pupils who expect to enter have not yet returned from their vacation.

The fact that yesterday and today are Jewish holidays has kept a number of children out of school, but they will undoubtedly report tomorrow morning.

Mrs. G. Ashdown Audsley.

Mrs. G. Ashdown Audsley, formerly residing on Grove street with her son, Maurice A. Audsley, died on Saturday at her home in Lawerre, N. Y. She had been ill for some time. She is survived by a husband and six children, all of whom live in this country with the exception of one son, who resides in London, England, and who arrived home this week. The burial was in Hope cemetery, Yonkers, N. Y.

Their First Anniversary.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Warren chapel tendered a surprise party to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bryan, of Grant avenue, last night, in honor of their first wedding anniversary. A handsome piece of china was presented, Rev. J. O. McKelvey, of Warren chapel, making the presentation speech. Games, music and refreshments were enjoyed.

Five Days for Theft.

On the complaint of William L. Smalley, Jr., of Rockyview Heights, Charles Williams was arrested yesterday on a charge of stealing grapes. He was arraigned before Recorder Dolliver in the Borough Court last night and given five days in the borough jail to think it over.

AMUSEMENT OVER FOWLER

Politicians Laughing Over Story that He'll Get Union's Vote for Governor.

SAY HE'S A DEAD ONE

Well Known That Congressman Would Like to Be an U. S. Senator, But He Will Never Be One.

Some surprises and considerable amusement has been caused in political circles in Union county by the publication in the New York Sun of a dispatch telling that Congressman Fowler, of this district, is really the choice of the Republican leaders for the nomination for Governor.

Mr. Fowler will not get a single delegate vote in Union, and until this newspaper story was started he was not seriously mentioned. When Mr. Fowler was defeated in his home county for re-election last November that seemed to settle his status as a Gubernatorial candidate. It did with his Republican constituents.

It is well known that Congressman Fowler would like to go to the United States Senate. He has no particular liking for the executive work of a Governor, but the position for the next three years would be most advantageous for building Senatorial fences. The next Governor will have a big patronage, and will be at liberty to use it for his own benefit, as his term will expire before a United States Senator is elected in 1911.

It would be idle to talk of the nomination of a man who would not have a delegate of his own county to nominate him. And that is the position of Congressman Fowler.

COST HIM $15 TO ACT AS GOOD SAMARITAN

DELNERO'S HOME ROBBED WHILE HE PILOTED BEWILDERED WOMAN.

Nicholas Delnero, of Forest avenue, Fanwood, who has been the victime several times of late of sneak thieves, lost another $15 Friday night, as a result of playing the Good Samaritan. An Italian woman, who could speak but little English, arrived at the railroad station Thursday night on one of the late trains. She was unable to tell Marshal Logan where she wanted to go, so the officer took her to Delnero's home to have him act as interpreter. It was learned that the woman was looking for an Italian family residing on the "commons."

Delnero offered to pilot the woman to her destination. When he returned home he found that he had neglected to lock the door of his house. Fearing a repetition of past losses, he began a hurried investigation. He had not gone far when he discovered that $15, which he had safely placed as he though, in the inside pocket of his vest was gone.

No clew to the sneak thief could be found and as this is only one of the several losses he has sustained, he has given up hope of catching the thief or securing the return of his money. It is only two weeks ago that $25 was taken by some one familiar with his habits. He has decided that in the future only pocket change will be kept in the house.

FR. BOGAN IN CHARGE OF BIG DEMONSTRATION

CHOSEN BY BISHOP TO SUPERVISE A CATHOLIC PARADE.

Father Bogan of St. Mary's church, has been requested by Bishop O'Connor to take charge of the big public demonstration of Catholic men from all parts of Union county in Elizabeth on Sunday, October 13. The affair will be held in the interest of the movement to discourage profanation and the use of all indecent and obscene language. A similar demonstration was held in Elizabeth last year. It is expected that fully 5,000 Catholic men will be in the parade to be held in Elizabeth.

The parade will be followed with and address by Father Chadwick, who was chaplain of the ill-fated Battleship Maine. This will be delivered in the public square. Father Bogan and a general committee or arrangements met in Elizabeth Sunday to perfect plans for the demonstration and it is believed that it will be the largest of the kind ever held in the county.

VETERAN BROKER IS DEAD

Capt. Henry L. Johnson's Life Ended by Stroke of Paralysis at Niece's Home.

A GRADUATE OF YALE

Was a Member of Gen. Fitz-John Porter's Staff in Civil War —Seventy Years of Age.

Henry L. Johnson, one of the oldest members of the New York Stock Exchange, died yesterday at the home of his niece, Mrs. William A. Pinto, on West Eighth street, from paralysis, with which he was stricken a week ago. He came to Plainfield to visit Mr. and Mrs. Pinto, intending to take a several days' automobile trip. He was taken ill soon after coming here and passed away yesterday.

He was born in Jewett City, Conn., in 1837, and was graduated from Yale in the class of '61. Immediately upon his graduation he joined the First Connecticut Volunteers and was sent at once to the front. He gained promotion to the rank of captain, serving on the staff of General Perry, and later as captain of the regular army on the staff of General Fitz-John Porter. He engaged in the first balloon manoeuvres of the American army at Yorktown, Va. While in the service he was offered the post of major in the Connecticut Cavalry Regiment, which he declined, retaining his position as captain in the army.

After the close of the war, Mr. Johnson resigned his commission and entered the brokerage business, connecting himself with the firm of Brayton & Ives, which later became Ives & Johnson. He was a member of the Stock Exchange from 1869 to 1903, when he transferred his seat to his son, Leeds Johnson.

Mr. Johnson was twice married. His first wife was Miss Caroline Howe, of New York. He was married the second time to Miss Caroline F. Leeds in 1873. He leaves one son, Leeds Johnson, now of the firm of R. J. Kimball & Co.

The funeral services will be held Thursday morning from the home of Mrs. W. A. Pinto, on West Eighth street, at 10:30 o'clock.

Broke Up Crap Game at Station.

Acting on complaints made at police headquarters, Policeman Tobias Nolan went out last night to break up the crap games that hackmen were said to have made a regular thing at the North avenue station. He found William Bird, W. E. Collins, and Harry Seader in the midst of a game, and arrested them. Judge Runyon, when they were arraigned this morning, said he knew night hacking wasn't the liveliest thing imaginable and some amusement was necessary, but he thought the hackmen might find something better than crap shooting to do. Sentence was suspended with a warning.

BEATON SUCCEEDS FISK

Takes Mayor's Place on Hospital Board, Latter Becoming an Ex-officio Member.

OTHER CHANGES MADE

J. W. DeGraff Succeeds George P. Mellick As Member of Finance Committee— —Business.

George A. Beaton was elected a member of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, at the September meeting last night, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mayor Charles J. Fisk. This was necessary because Mr. Fisk, by virtue of his office as Mayor, is a member of the board ex-officio. Mr. Beaton has for a long time been interested in hospital affairs and is well-fitted to become a member of the board.

Mr. Beaton is a New York broker and philanthropist who has done much for local institutions, the hospital in particular. He is a man of marked executive ability and is highly regarded here.

Another resignation received last night was that of Councilman George P. Mellick as a member of the finance committee, who is succeeded by James W. DeGraff.

The other business was largely routine and because it has been two months since a meeting was held there was considerable. The reports were all encouraging, showing steady progress in the various departments.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

Newark's Biggest Rug Show.

The Only Collection of Orientals in the State.

The greatest part of the Carpet Store is now given over to the show and sale of Rugs, for Rugs are much more extensively used today than ever, people finding them preferable in many ways to carpets, being particularly easy to take up and clean.

Domestic Rugs are here in an immense assortment and included in the collection are French Wiltons, Royal Wiltons, Wilton Velvets, Body Brussels and Tapestry Brussels Rugs, in sizes running all the way from 18x36 up to 12x15 feet. The patterns and colorings seen in the Domestic Rugs now so closely approach the wonderful Oriental effects that it is really difficult to tell one from the other, except that the American made rugs are more nicely finished and more perfectly woven.

Both Antique and Modern Persian, Turkish and India Rugs are shown here in sizes ranging from the tiny doormat to the great room rugs, some costing only a few dollars, others running into the hundreds, yet all moderately priced.

This is the only Oriental rug collection in Newark worth your while and it is really a large and satisfying stock, equaling many of the most pretentious collections shown in New York, yet free from the taint of extravagance so prevalent in the pricing of Oriental Rugs in the greater city.

We will be glad to have visitors see the splendid display of Oriental Rugs in the Turkish Kiosk.

Randolph was as effective as ever on Saturday pitching against Scotch Plains, but the team could not hit opportunely, and his work failed to count.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Alberta Gallatin and a capable supporting company will be at the New Plainfield theatre tonight in Stone & Tassin's big Western success, "Judith of the Plains," by Eldredge & Meakin.

The scenery, costumes and special effects of "Red Feather" are said to have cost Florentz Ziegfeld about $72,000. Joseph M. Gaites has furnished a strong company, with Cheridah Simpson at the head of it, and a big chorus behind her. "Red Feather" will be seen here Saturday afternoon and night.

Marie Cahill, the most American of comediennes, who will be seen here in "Marrying Mary," had an ambition as a little slip of a girl to be a great emotional actress. She is recognized as one of the greatest fun-makers on the stage today. It is a far call from Shakespeare to "Marrying Mary."

The company coming with Hap Ward, in "Not Yet, But Soon," which will be presented at the New Plainfield theatre Thursday night, includes Lucy Daly, Fred Wyckoff, Lew Kelly, Abe Friedland, Ed Gilmore, Robert Evans, Harry Parent, Richard Barry, Caroline Hooker, Mae Kilcoyne and Leslie Lyle. Among the new musical offerings are "Dolly from Dublin Town," "I Got Next," "Innocent Amelia," "My Gal Texas," "Think of the Gril Down Home," "As Long as the World Goes 'Round," "I Could Take a Chance With You," "Hello, Melinda" and "A Trip to Opera Land."

In "Caught in the Rain," which will come to the New Plainfield theatre Friday night, Charles Frohman has surrounded Mr. Collier with a powerful company, including Albert Perry, John Saville, Richard Sterling, Reginald Mason, W. H. Post, Thomas Beauregard, Thomas Martin, Charles Poore, John Adam, Thomas Lennon, Ellen Mortimer, Jane Laurel, Helena Collier-Garrick and Anne Bradley.

Charles Klein's play, "The Lion and the Mouse," which Henry B. Harris will produce here at the New Plainfield theatre Monday, September 16, contains elements of vital interest to all classes of people. Mr. Harris has gathered together an exceptionally fine cast. Despite the fact of the excellence of the attraction there will be no advance in prices. The company is headed by Gertrude Coghlan and Edmund Breese.

POINTS FOR THE BUYERS

The Plainfield Art Store in the Y. M. C. A. building is the place to purchase art materials or works of art at reasonable prices.

Harry K. Lister, of North avenue, sells the Edison phonograph and Victor talking machine; also records for both. Drop in and hear the latest selections.

A. M. Griffen, the East Front street hardware merchant, is prepared to put your furnace or stoves in first-class condition for winter use. He also sells the best hardware. Prices low.

The Woodhull & Martin Company is prepared for a big fall and winter trade and persons would do well to inspect the large stock before purchasing elsewhere. Everything from the dress goods department to that of housefurnishing will be found here in a wide variety and at low prices.

INTER-STATE FAIR.

The Inter-State Fair at Trenton, N. J., will be opened this year Monday, September 30th, and will close Friday, October 4th. The week will be filled with pleasant surprises for this, the greatest fair east of the Mississippi. New departments have been added, the racing program has been entirely revamped and a vaudeville program combining the newest and best of out-door attractions will be presented.

Theodore H. Coleman, the acknowledged peer of race meet promoters in the United States and the best known horseman in this country, has been engaged to conduct the horse racing department. Coleman is of Wilkes-Barre, and whenever his name appears in connection with a meet horsemen know the very best is coming to them and to patrons of the racing. He is the man who for a time managed the Empire City track and who established the New York State Fair. At his spring meets this year in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre he had 200 horses entered, an unprecedented record.

Mr. Coleman's policy at the Inter-State Fair is shown by the fact that two days after he signed his engagement for Trenton he contracted for the appearance at the Inter-State Fair of Major Delmar, the king of trotters, with the world's trotting record of 1:59¼, to go against time.

The racing program, entries for which close September 24th, consists of thirteen classes for purses of $500 each. The fastest race is the 2:09 pace and the slowest the 2:29 trot. The intermediate races are arranged to accommodate the most popular classes, thus assuring good fields of well-matched horses in all of these events.

It was a great surprise that Clinton Avenue should be beaten on its home ground, but the players could not connect with Johnson's curves at the right time. He kept the bingles well scattered.

THE SURROGATESHIP.

Some semblance of opposition to the renomination of George T. Parrot, of Elizabeth, to the surrogateship has developed at the eleventh hour. Freeholder Benjamin King, of Clark township, having been persuaded to lend his personality to the unfortunate scheme by allowing his name to be used as a candidate. There is no fault to be found with the Clark township man, but his nomination would be a serious blow to the probate business in Union county. Not only lacking the ripe experience that the Elizabethan has gained during the many years that he has so capably administered the affairs of the office, but possessing no knowledge of the law, the suddenly sprung candidate is decidedly at a disadvantage. He could not possibly give the quality of service that has been received from the present efficient and obliging incumbent. Consequently his selection would not be in conformity with the theories of ideal government. On the other hand, it would be a great mistake.

No word has been said against Mr. Parrot's reputation; none has been dreamt of in disparagement of his ability. The sum and substance of the opposition, such as it is, comes from a source which would go at any length to defeat a man who has the courage to be faithful to his friends. Mr. Parrot happens to be close personally to hundreds of substantial residents of Elizabeth among whom is Hamilton F. Keane. Because of that friendship, the plot is laid to retire him to private life. If successful, such a scheme would work great harm to the people of Union county who realize that in the surrogate's office they have an ideal official. It is not for the present official's sake, however, that we raise a protest against his proposed retirement. He, himself, says that he is willing to step down and out and he has shown his earnestness in this respect by declining to make any fight for renomination. But it is for the people, and particularly for the lawyers, that we raise objection to any change being made. Let them who thus array themselves against their proposed victim prove ought against him before they make Union county be the victim of their plot. This they cannot do and therefore they fail to show just cause for the retirement of one of the best officials Union county ever had.

"Vox populi, vox Dei," declares former Assemblyman Samuel S. Swackhamer, should be the first and most important plank in the party platform—Newark News dispatch.

If Samuel gets off any of this sort of talk away back in Somerset county, some of his friends there will brand him as a wonderful scholar, a reputation which the modest Jeffersonian would shrink from having, of course.

The primary began in the various districts at 1 o'clock this afternoon and the polls will remain open until 9 o'clock tonight, thus affording every voter an opportunity to register his choice for local nominees and county and State delegates. The list of polling places will be found in another column. Don't forget to vote!

LITERARY

One of the most striking features of the September McClure's is George Kennan's brilliant article on conditions in San Francisco. His story of how Schmitz and Ruef acquired an autocratic control of the city, of how they introduced corruption and graft into every department of municipal government.

An admirable magazine is the September Atlantic, varied, brilliant, and readable as ever. The leader, a divorce article, "Why American Marriages Fail," by Anna A. Rogers, presents a new and unexpected view of this great question. An historical sketch, "Earl Percy's Dinner-Table," by Harold Murdock, is of unusual interest to students of the American Revolution.

Variety of interest is the keynote of the September number of The Travel Magazine. Coming as it does between the big seasons of summer and winter migrations it gives the publishers an opportunity to present several articles of unique interest and more general character than we can find space for in our special numbers. And from the handsome red and green cover throughout the whole number the issue is delightfully seasonable.

Ex-President Grover Cleveland, attired in shooting clothes and with his gun and a bag of ducks, greets the public from the cover of Recreation for September. It is a remarkably good likeness of this hale and hearty seventy-year-old statesman-sportsman, and is a reproduction of a hitherto unpublished photograph.

President Roosevelt, in the September Everybody's, returns to the attack of the "Nature Fakers." Over his own segnature he repeats the charges of falsehood, directing his fire chiefly against W. J. Long, whose affidavits he declares are "worthless." A group of prominent naturalists also contribute to the controversy in this number.

The September number of Scribner's Magazine has many beautiful artistic features: the frontispiece, "The Refugees," and full-page, "An Alarm," are reproductions in color of two effective pictures of moose, very lifelike and spirited; Arthur Symons' appreciation of the dignity and ancient beauty of "Siena" is illustrated by Peixotto, whose delicate drawings are reproduced in tint. Charles S Chapman, an artist who wries his own text, describes adventures in the woods with a "culler," whose business it is to "cull" the various accumulations along the skidways. Mr. Chapman's pictures represent the loggers in the woods in winter.

NEW JERSEY GREAT FOR SAVIOUR'S WORK

FIGURES SHOWING OPPORTUNITIES OF CHURCH IN JERSEY.

Many interesting facts concerning New Jersey were introduced in a sermon preacher Sunday morning by Rev. Dr. C. J. Keevil at the First Baptist church, at Trenton. His subject was "The State of New Jersey and Its Opportunities."

Another feature of the day's services was a service in the evening by the pastor's brother, Rev. Joseph Keevil, of the Second Church of Christ, in Brooklyn, N. Y. The text of the morning sermon was "They * * * went about preaching the word"—Acts 8:4.

"My message this morning," said Dr. Keevil, "is to call your attention to the great opportunities presented to us in our own State of New Jersey, and to see if it might be said of us, as of the early disciples, "they went about preaching the word." Let us consider first our field; though not very large geographically, it is a great State—one of the greatest in the Union. It contains 7,525 square miles of territory, its population is 1,883,669, or 250 persons to the square mile. It is a State strong in city life, for over two-thirds of its population live in cities, there being but 554,597 persons living in country districts.

"Exceedingly interesting conditions prevail as to the people of New Jersey. The males and females are evenly divided, fifty per cent of each. The white population is 1,812,317; the negro population 69,844, and other races 1,508. Of those native born there are 1,451,785 and the foreign born number 431,884. This gives us a large foreign born population, though the native born are largely in the majority and may control affairs if they so desire.

"Our State is a cosmopolitan one. No fewer than 46 different countries of people are represented, as follows: Hungary, 14,913; India, 94; Ireland, 94,844; Italy, 41,865; Japan, 67; Africa, 106; Asia, 248; Atlantic Islands, 89; Australia, 175; Austria, 14,728; Belgium, 1,197; Bohemia, 1,063; Canada-English, 6,014; Canada-French, 1,118; Central America, 156; China, 1,344; Cuba, 240; Denmark, 3,899; England, 45,428; Europe, 37; Finland, 367; France, 5,543; Germany, 119,598; Greece, 115; Holland, 10,261; Louxemburg, 32; Mexico, 55; Norway, 2,296; Pacific Islands, 23; Poland-Austrian, 1,854; Poland-German, 1,816; Poland-Ruslan, 8,653; Poland-unknown 2,034; Portugal, 62; Roumania, 478; Russia, 19,745; Scotland, 14,211; South America, 266; Spain, 145; Sweden, 7,337; Switzerland, 6,570; Turkey, 636; Wales, 1,195; West Indies, 573; other countries, 150; born at sea, 244.

"Ours is an educational State. Schools of learning are well established—all grades are taught, from the kindergarten to the college and university, and citizens are by law compelled to educate their children. There are 572,923 minors of school age in the State and 309,238 of them are attending school; there is thus a serious indifference somewhere when, although the State provides the opportunity, there are still 263,685 minors out of school. The percentage of illiterates in the State is very low indeed, but 86,658 all told. This puts New Jersey in the front ranks of States for education.

"Ours is a great industrial State. There are 266,387 wage-earners, and the value of the manufactured products of the State are constantly increasing, that of 1905 being forty per cent more than for 1904. There are 7,011 industrial establishments, paying out in calaries $125,192,633. New Jersey today stands second in the list of States for per capita wealth, we having a per capita of $261.

"Ours is a strong religious State. There are 2,324 Evangelical Sunday schools, with 307,994 scholars; there are 20,934 members in the home departments, and from the ranks of the Sunday school last year 12,081 scholars joined the church. Statistics for all the churches are not available, but from our own reports we find that the Baptists have 352 churches, 61,324 church members, 339 Sunday school and 44,348 scholars, a money investment in property of $5,183,400, and total contributions of our people for one year's work amount to $768,792.31.

"This then is our state, our great opportunity. It well merits our pride and our heartiest loyalty in work and love. Let us cultivate that which is true, uplifting and constructive, that the blessings we now enjoy may increase and multiply continually."

Mrs. Frank L. Manchester and daughter, of Lafayette place, who have been spending their vacation at Ocean Grove, have returned home.

COLLEGE EDUCATION EASY

Career in Institutions of Learning are Started With Little Capital.

SAYS PRESIDENT REED

Rev. Dr. George Edward Reed, a Self-made Man, Offers a Helping Hand to Ambitious Ones.

It is difficult to bring home to the average young man or woman of today, in a way that can be easily understood, the fact that a college education is within the easy grasp of any one who has a mind to lift himself or herself to a position where leadership among one's fellows may be rightfully acquired and consistently held.

Thousands of earnest young people yearn for the elevating and ennobling influence and associations which higher education brings, but in the path of many, the dimly defined dragon of ENORMOUS EXPENSE rears its monstrous bulk, at the first glimpse of which, many a brave heart shudderingly slinks backward to the easy-going and unprofitable ways of ignorance, while a few daring souls advance to the observation hill of INVESTIGATION to find the horrible monster to be nothing more than a stuffed bug-a-boo, a sham, a stage-property, anything but an impassable obstacle, and smilingly proceed to the vantage points which a college education offers.

Investigation of the cost of a modern college education and the means by which the wherewithal might be secured, will open up a boundless field of possibilities for anyone who is inclined to state his case fully, and apply to the proper sources for information.

Concrete and contrasted illustrations, if pointed enough, bring many people to see the force of arguments of which they would otherwise be heedless, and we believe we state the truth, when we say that the total annual cost of a latter-day college education, including all items, such as board, room rent, light, heat, tuition, text books, laundry, athletics and incidental expenses, is not more in amount than the average cost of the four rubber tires on an automobile. Even in these days of high prices it is hard for a person to realize that all expenses at college for a year can be paid with a sum of money ranging from $225 to $275; but the fact remains that there are many ancient and honorable institutions of learning, with faculties of unquestioned distinction, that offer the choice of a classical or scientific education, with all that goes with them, for this paltry amount of money.

The colleges of the land have thousands upon thousands of students who make enough money at employment during the vacation months to see themselves comfortably through the scholastic terms, or who, with the assistance furnished by a good friend, or in many cases the college itself, finance their collegiate career successfully.

There are few colleges in the country that give such earnest and enthusiastic help and advice to prospective students as the ancient college of Dickinson, located at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. The president of Dickinson College, George Edward Reed, is a self-made man, of just the type to enthuse the youth without many resources, who feels that he would like to rise above the level of ignorance. President Reed is one of the few modern college presidents who attends in person to every inquiry made for information concerning the wonderful institution which he and many other brilliant men have spent a century and a quarter in upbuilding.

President Reed said the other day that he would like to have the privilege of a five-minute talk with every young man or woman who felt the yearning for something higher and better, and that he felt that in that short space of time with each, he could scare away enough false obstacles and supply enough soil for the growth of ambition to fill the colleges of the country.

Dickinson College, which will in 1908 celebrate the 125th anniversary of her foundation, and which ranks as eleventh in point of age among the colleges of the country, furnishes remarkable evidence to show that a college education is almost invariably followed by distinction of some kind. The alumni statistics of the college show that out of a total number of alumni, aggregating 4788, the graduates were 2460 and the non-graduate alumni, 2326.

The alumni records of the college show that the high hopes cherished by her illustrious founders have been realized many times over, as the following statistics showing the lines of activity into which her alumni have gone, would indicate:

PROFESSIONAL LIFE—Law, 968; ministry, 845; medicine, 361.

EDUCATORS—College presidents, 41; college professors, 125; superintendents of schools, 51; principals of seminaries and high schools, 230; teachers, lower grades, 534.

POLITICAL AND JUDICIAL—President United States, 1; chief justice United States, 1; governors and lieutenant governors of states, 9; cabinet officers, 9; United States senators, 10; foreign ministers, 7; members of congress, 50; state senators, 38; representatives, 121; federal, state, county and supreme court judges, 86; officers, army and navy, 245.

OTHER OCCUPATIONS—Editors and Journalists, 72; Financial and Mercantile Pursuits, 465; Engineers, 34; Farmers, 163.

Dickinson College has three distinct departments, namely, (1) The College of Liberal Arts, (2) The School of Law, and (3) Conway Hall, the gift of Andrew Carnegie, one of the best preparatory schools in the country, each under distinct faculties, composed of able and experienced instructors.

Thoroughness in work, high grade of scholarship, and attention to the personal development of the individual are, however, more emphasized at Dickinson than the enrolling of large numbers of students. This has been the policy of the past and will be the policy of the future.

During the 18 years of President Reed's administration, many new buildings have been erected and the numbers in attendance more than trebled, the enrollment in all departments last year being 522.

President Reed says that many of the students at Dickinson find ways to earn a part of their expense without serious interference with their college work.

A more appropriate environment could hardly be selected for a college than the old garrison town of Carlisle. Identified with the early history of the country as it has been, a nursery of high minded patriotism, and refined as it has been by the presence of some of the greatest minds of America, its classic shades form an appropriate setting for the venerable Dickinson. Carlisle is pre-eminently a city of churches, a city of parks, the greatest library town of the state, the home of refinement and culture, and according to the public prints, the greatest athletic community in the country.

President Reed, of Dickinson, earnestly feels that he can give help to any young men or women who wish to consider possibilities of college education for themselves and he will gladly take up their inquiries personally.

BOB HAMPTON of PLACER

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY A.C. McCLURG & CO.

"Yes, I think so; he told me he owned a mine—the Golden Rule the name was; the very choice in words would seem to indicate his religious nature. You have the only church in Glencaid, I understand, and I wonder greatly he has never joined you. But perhaps he may be prejudiced against your denomination. There is so much narrowness in religion. But I left every prejudice east of the Missouri," she declared, laughingly, "every one, social and religious. I'm going to be a true westerner, from the top of my head to the toe of my shoe. Is Mr. McNeil in your church?"

The minister hesitated. "I really do not recall the name," he confessed at last, reluctantly. "I scarcely think I can have ever met the gentleman."

"Oh, you ought to; he is so intensely original, and his face is full of character. He reminds me of some old paladin of the Middle Ages. You would be interested in him at once. He is the foreman of the 'Bar V' ranch, somewhere near here."

"Do you mean Billy McNeil, over on Sinsiniwa creek?" broke in Herndon.

"I think quite likely, uncle; wouldn't he make a splendid addition to Mr. Wynkoop's church?"

Herndon choked, his entire body shaking with ill-suppressed enjoyment. "I should imagine yes," he admitted finally. "Billy McNeil—oh, Lord! There's certainly a fine opening for you to do some missionary work, Phoebe."

"Well, and I'm going to," announced the young lady, firmly. "I guess I can read men's characters, and I know all Mr. McNeil needs is to have some one show an interest in him. Have you a large church, Mr. Wynkoop?"

"Not large if judged from an eastern standpoint," he confessed, with some regret. "Our present membership is composed of eight women and three men, but the congregational attendance is quite good, and constantly increasing."

"Only eight women and three men!" breathlessly. "And you have been laboring upon this field for five years! How could it be so small?"

Wynkoop pushed back his chair, anxious to redeem himself in the estimation of this fair stranger.

"Miss Spencer," he explained, "my parish comprises this entire mining region, and I am upon horseback among the foothills and up in the ranges for fully a third of my time. The spirit of the mining population, as well as of the cattlemen, while not actually hostile, is one of indifference to religious thought. For three long years I worked here without even a church organization or a building; and apparently without the faintest encouragement. Now that we have a nucleus gathered, a comfortable building erected and paid for, with an increasing congregation, I begin to feel that those seemingly barren five years were not without spiritual value."

She quickly extended her hands. "Oh, it is so heroic, so self-sacrificing! I am going to help you, Mr. Wynkoop, in every way I possible can—I shall certainly speak to both Mr. Moffat and Mr. McNeil the very first opportunity. I feel almost sure that they will join."

The unavoidable exigencies of a choir practice compelled Mr. Wynkoop to retire early, nor was it yet late when the family circle also dissolved, and the two girls were themselves alone.

The light was finally extinguished; the silvery moonlight streamed across the foot of the bed; and the regular breathing of the girls evidenced slumber.

CHAPTER XII.
Under Orders.

It was no pleasant assignment to duty which greeted First Lieut. Donald Brant, commanding Troop N, Seventh cavalry, when that regiment came once more within the environs of civilization, from its summer exercises in the field. Bethune had developed into a somewhat important post, socially as well as from a strictly military standpoint, and numerous, indeed, were the attractions offered there to any young officer whose duty called him to serve the colors on those bleak Dakota prairies. Brant frowned at the innocent words, reading them over again with gloomy eyes and an exclamation of unmitigated disgust, yet there was no escaping their plain meaning. Trouble was undoubtedly brewing among the Sioux, trouble in which the Cheyennes, and probably others also, were becoming involved Every soldier patroling that long northern border recognized the approach of some dire development, some early coup of savagery.

Brant was not blind to all this, nor to the necessity of having in readiness selected bodies of seasoned troops, yet it was not in soldier nature to refrain from grumbling when the earliest detail chanced to fall to him. But orders were orders in that country; and although he crushed the innocent paper passionately beneath his heel, five hours later he was in saddle, riding steadily westward, his depleted troop of horsemen clattering at his heels.

"You Must Be an Odd Sort of a Girl," He Commented, Soberly.

Up the valley of the Bear Water, slightly above Glencaid,—far enough beyond the saloon radius to protect his men from possible corruption, yet within easy reach of the military telegraph,—they made camp in the early morning upon a wooded terrace overlooking the stage road, and settled quietly down as one of those numerous posts with which the army chiefs sought to hem in the dissatisfied redmen, and learn early the extent of their hostile plans.

Brant was now in a humor considerably happier than when he first rode forth from Bethune. He watched the men of his troop while with quip and song they made comfortable camp, and then strolled slowly up the valley, his own affairs soon completely forgotten in the beauty of near-by hills beneath the golden glory of the morning sun. Once he paused and looked back upon ugly Glencaid, dingy and forlorn even at that distance; then he crossed the narrow stream by means of a convenient log, and clambered up the somewhat steep bank. A heavy fringe of low bushes clung close along the edge of the summit, but a plainly defined path led among their intricacies. He pressed his way through, coming into a glade where sunshine flickered through the overarching branches of great trees, and the grass was green and short, like that of a well-kept lawn.

As Brant emerged from the underbrush he suddenly beheld a fair vision of young womanhood resting on the grassy bank just before him. She was partially reclining, as if startled by his unannounced approach, her face turned toward him, one hand grasping an open book, the other shading her eyes from the glare of the sun. Something in the graceful poise, the piquant, uplifted face, the dark gloss of heavy hair, and the unfrightened gaze held him speechless until the picture had been impressed forever upon his memory. He beheld a girl on the verge of womanhood, fair of skin, the red glow of health flushing her cheeks, the lips parted in surprise, the sleeve fallen back from one white, rounded arm, the eyes honest, sincere, mysterious. She recognized him with a glance, and her lips closed as she remembered how and when they had met before. But there was no answering recollection within his eyes, only admiration—nothing clung about this Naida to remind him of a neglected waif of the garrison. She read all this in his face, and the lines about her mouth changed quickly into a slightly quizzical smile, her eyes brightening.

"You should at least have knocked, sir," she ventured, sitting up on the grassy bank, the better to confront him, "before intruding thus uninvited."

He lifted his somewhat dingy scouting hat and bowed humbly.

"I perceived no door giving warning that I approached such presence, and the first shock of surprise was perhaps as great to me as to you. Yet, now that I have blundered thus far, I beseech that I be permitted to venture upon yet another step."

She sat looking at him, a trim, soldierly figure, his face young and pleasant to gaze upon, and her dark eyes sensibly softened.

"What step?"

"To tarry for a moment beside the divinity of this wilderness."

She laughed with open frankness, her white teeth sparkling behind the red, parted lips.

"Perhaps you may, if you will first consent to be sensible," she said, with returning gravity; "and I reserve the right to turn you away whenever you begin to talk or act foolish. If you accept these conditions, you may sit down."

He seated himself upon the soft grass ledge, retaining the hat in his hands. "You must be an odd sort of a girl," he commented, soberly, "not to welcome an honest expression of admiration."

"Oh, was that it? Then I duly bow my acknowledgment. I took your words for one of those silly compliments by which men believe they honor women. I am not a baby, nor am I seeking amusement."

He glanced curiously at her book. "And yet you condescend to read love stories," he said, smiling. "I expected to discover a treatise on philosophy."

"I read whatever I chance to get my hands on, here in Glencaid," she retorted, "just as I converse with whoever comes along. I am hopeful of some day discovering a rare gem hidden in the midst of the trash. I am yet young."

"You are indeed young," he said, quietly, "and with some of life's lessons still to learn. One is that frankness is not necessarily flippancy, nor honesty harshness. However, if you will offer me a topic worthy the occasion, in either philosophy, science, or literature, I will endeavor to feed your mind."

She uplifted her innocent eyes demurely to his face. "You are so kind. I am deeply interested just now in the Japanese conception of the transmigration of souls."

"How extremely fortunate! It chances to be my favorite theme, but my mental processes are peculiar, and you must permit me to work up toward it somewhat gradually. For instance, as a question leading that way, how, in the incarnation of this world, do you manage to exist in such a hole of a place?—that is, provided you really reside here."

"Why, I consider this a most delightful nook."

"My reference was to Glencaid."

"Oh! Why, I live from within, not without. Mind and heart, not environment, make life, and my time is occupied most congenially. I am being faithfully nutured on the Presbyterian catechism, and also trained in the graces of earthly society These alternate, thus preparing me for whatever may happen in this world or the next."

His face pictured bewilderment, but also a determination to persevere. "An interesting combination, I admit. But from your appearance this cannot always have been your home?"

"Oh, thank you. I believe not always; but I wonder at your being able to discern my superiority to these surroundings. And do you know your questioning is becoming quite personal? Does that yield me an equal privilege?"

He bowed, perhaps relieved at thus permitting her to assume the initiative, and rested lazily back upon the grass, his eyes intently studying her face.

"I suppose from your clothes you must be a soldier. What is that figure 7 on your hat for?"

"The number of my regiment, the Seventh cavalry."

Her glance was a bit disdainful as she coolly surveyed him from head to foot. "I should imagine that a strong, capable appearing fellow like you might do much better than that. There is so much work in the world worth doing, and so much better pay."

"What do you mean? Isn't a soldier's life a worthy one?"

"Oh, yes, of course, in a way. We have to have soldiers, I suppose; but if I were a man I'd hate to waste all my life tramping around at $16 a month."

He smothered what sounded like a rough ejaculation, gazing into her demure eyes as if he strongly suspected a joke hid in their depths. "Do—do you mistake me for an enlisted man?"

"Oh, I didn't know; you said you were a soldier, and that's what I always heard they got. I am so glad if they give you more. I was only going to say that I believed I could get you a good place in McCarthy's store if you wanted it. He pays $65 and his clerk has just left."

Brant stared at her with open mouth, totally unable for the moment to decide whether or not that innocent, sympathetic face masked mischief. Before he succeeded in regaining confidence and speech, she had risen to her feet, holding back her skirt with one hand.

"Really, I must go," she announced calmly, drawing back toward the slight opening between the bushes. "No doubt you have done fully as well as you could, considering your position in life; but this has proved another disappointment. You have fallen, far, very far, below my ideal. Good-by."

He sprang instantly erect, his cheeks flushed. "Please don't go without a further word. We seem predestined to misunderstand. I am even willing to confess myself a fool in the hope of some time being able to convince you otherwise. You have not even told me that you live here; nor do I know your name."

She shook her head positively, repressed merriment darkening her eyes and wrinkling the corners of her mouth. "It would be highly improper to introduce myself to a stranger—we Presbyterians never do that."

"But do you feel no curiosity as to who I may be?"

"Why, not in the least; the thought is ridiculous. How very conceited you must be to imagine such a thing!"

He was not a man easily daunted, nor did he recall any previous embarrassment in the presence of a young woman. But now he confronted something utterly unique; those quiet eyes seemed to look straight through him. His voice faltered sadly, yet succeeded in asking: "Are we, then, never to meet again? Am I to understand this to be your wish?"

She laughed. "Really, sir, I am not aware that I have the slightest desire in the matter. I have given it no thought, but I presume the possibility of our meeting again depends largely upon yourself, and the sort of society you keep. Surely you cannot expect that I would seek such an opportunity?"

He bowed humbly. "You mistake my purpose. I merely meant to ask if there was not some possibility of our again coming together socially—in the presence of mutual friends."

"Oh, I scarcely think so; I do not remember ever having met any soldiers at the social functions here—excepting officers. We are extremely exclusive in Glencaid," she dropped him a mocking courtesy, "and I have always moved in the most exclusive set."

Piqued by her tantalizing manner, he asked, "What particular social functions are about to occur that may possibly open a passage into your guarded presence?"

She seemed immersed in thought, her face turned partially aside. "Unfortunately, I have not my list of engagements here," and she glanced about at him shyly. "I can recall only one at present, and I am not even certain—that is, I do not promise—to attend that. However, I may do so. The Miners' Bachelor club gives a reception and ball to-morrow evening in honor of the new schoolmistress."

"What is her name?" with responsive eagerness.

She hesitated, as if doubtful of the strict propriety of mentioning it to a stranger.

"Miss Phoebe Spencer," she said, her eyes cast demurely down.

"Ah!" he exclaimed, in open triumph; "and have I, then, at last made fair capture of your secret? You are Miss Phoebe Spencer."

She drew back still farther within the recesses of the bushes, at his single victorious step forward.

"I? Why certainly not. I am merely Miss Spencer's 'star' pupil, so you may easily judge something of what her superior attainments must necessarily be. But I am really going now, and I sincerely trust you will be able to secure a ticket for to-morrow night; for if you once meet this Miss Spencer you will never yield another single thought to me. Mr—Mr —" her eyes dancing with laughter—"First Lieut. Donald Brant."

CHAPTER XIII.
Silent Murphy.

Brant sprang forward, all doubt regarding this young woman instantly dissipated by those final words of mischievous mockery. She had been playing with him as unconcernedly as if he were a mere toy sent for her amusement and his pride was stung.

But pursuit proved useless. Like a phantom she had slipped away amid the underbrush, leaving him to flounder blindly in the labyrinth. His incautious foot slipped along the steep edge of the shelving bank, and he went down, half stumbling, half sliding, until he came to a sudden pause on the brink of the little stream. The chase was ended, and he sat up, confused for the moment, and half questioning the evidence of his own eyes.

A small tent, dirty and patched, stood with its back against the slope of earth down which he had plunged. Its flap flung aside revealed within a pile of disarranged blankets, together with some scattered articles of wearing apparel, while just before the opening, his back pressed against the supporting pole, an inverted pipe between his yellow, irregular teeth, sat a hideous looking man. He was a withered, dried-up fellow, whose age was not to be guessed, having a skin as yellow as parchment, drawn in tight to the bones like that of a mummy, his eyes deep sunken like wells, and his head totally devoid of hair, although about his lean throat there was a copious fringe of iron-gray beard, untrimmed and scraggy. Down the entire side of one cheek ran a livid scar, while his nose was turned awry.

"It's—None of—Your Damn—Business. I'm—Not Under—Your Orders."

He sat staring at the newcomer, unwinking, his facial expression devoid of interest, but his fingers opening and closing in apparent nervousness. Twice his lips opened, but nothing except a peculiar gurgle sound issued from the throat, and Brant, who by this time had attained his feet and his self-possession, ventured to address him.

"Nice quiet spot for a camp," he remarked, pleasantly, "but a bad place for a tumble."

The sunken eyes expressed nothing, but the throat gurgled again painfully and finally the parted lips dropped a detached word or two. "Blame—pretty girl—that."

The lieutenant wondered how much of their conversation this old mummy had overheard, but he hesitated to question him. One inquiry, however, sprang to his surprised lips. "Do you know her?"

"Damn sight—better—than any one around here—know her—real name."

Brant stared incredulously. "Do you mean to insinuate that that young woman is living in this community under an assumed one? Why, she is scarcely more than a child! What do you mean, man?"

DIAMOND DUST.

The team that represented Scotch Plains on Crescent Oval Saturday in the game against Clinton Avenue, will probably be the same next season. Manager Frentz hopes to have Johnson, of Garwood, as a regular pitcher and other positions are well filled.

Another surprise was the defeat of the Y. M. C. A. team by the Laurels, of Bound Brook. This contest was played in an hour and a quarter, a remarkably short time. Harney had the best end of the pitching and the association boys failed to bunch their hits.

The West Ends, of Somerville, got desperate on Saturday and engaged Egner and Justice, of Trenton, to do their battery work against High Bridge. It has been so long since the team has won an important game that the fans decided to go the limit and change the luck.

Conover pitched a strong game for the association team again the Laurels, and should have won his game. He allowed his opponents but four hits.

The Philadelphia Athletics look like the winners of the American League pennant this year. Under the guidance of Manager Mack every member of the team is working his head off to win every game. The pitching staff was never in better condition and every one of the twirlers is doing exceptional work.

The Highlanders will play the Potter A. C. on Hope Common Saturday afternoon.

The West Ends will meet the Harrison A. C. on the Cricket Field, Saturday afternoon.

Plainfield A. C. Defeated.

The St. Mary's defeated the Plainfield A. C. on Hope Common Saturday afternoon by the score of 13 to 12. Heavy hitting by both teams kept the result in doubt until the last inning.

GOLF.

Will Sherwood, who is at present ill with typhoid fever, will be unable to defend his title as champion of the Western Professional Golfers' Association in the coming tournament to be held over the links of the Normandie Park Golf Club, of St. Louis. In the tournament a year ago Sherwood defeated Fred McLeod in the final round.

On that occasion the innovation of running off the affair at match play was tried. This style, however, has been abandoned, as the "pros" voted to return to the regulation seventy-two holes of medal play. Sherwood's success last year created quite a stir because of his being a home bred.

One of the favorites in the coming tournament will be Will Anderson, who, two seasons ago, left the Apawamis club to accept the position of professional of the Onwentsia club at a higher salary. Anderson, by the way, after a year of experimenting, has gone back to the rubber cored ball, and the friends of the former national open champion declare that he is playing better in consequence. Stewart Gardner, the former Garden City "pro," now identified with the Exmore country Club, is doing well and playing at the top of his game.

Dave Robertson and Fred Brand, the Pittsburg professionals, are also going well these days. In a recent four-ball match at the Allegheny Country Club these two defeated Peter Robertson and Jack Jolly. The feature of the match was the making of the first nine holes in 31 by Dave Robertson, breaking the old nine-hole record by three strokes.

Robert H. Cunningham, Jr., has broken the record for the North Jersey Country Club links. In a recent round with A. P. Gray, Jr., the former went out in 34 and home in 37 for a 71, which is three strokes better than par. On his card were five 5s, but all save one were taken at holes of 450 yards or more in length. The exception was at the 250-yard twelfth, but, on the other hand, he made no fewer than six 3s.

Well known professionals have been engaged for a football match at the Hackensack Golf Club on Tuesday, September 17. They are Aleo Smith, of Nassau; George Low, of Bultusrol; Jack Hobens, of Englewood, and Isaac Mackie, of Fox Hills. Smith, besides being a former national open champion, is the present title holder in the Eastern Professional Golfers' Association, while Low is open champion of the Metropolitan Golfers' Association. The Hackensack course was laid out by Low. R. B. Smith holds the record for the links—73.

What promises to result in a keen team match has been arranged for September 28 over the links of the New Haven Country Club. There will be ten men on a side, and opposing teams are to be composed of representative Connecticut and Rhode Island golfers. W. K. Shepard, of New Haven, is to captain the Connecticut team, and Harold Congdon, of Providence, will lead the Rhode Island forces.

TRUE TO HIS PROMISE.

Husband Bravely Went Through Ordeal to Keep Plighted Word.

He stood gazing down at the water. "It must be cold," he thought, "very cold." He shrank back and shuddered involuntarily. "My courage is failing," he soliloquized. "I can never do it." For a moment he reflected. Then, clinching his teeth he cried wildly "But I must! She laughed at me and said I would not dare. I must prove to her I am no poltroon." Again he gazed steadfastly into the water. So peaceful, so placid, it lay before him that had he been on some other mission he would have felt a sense of calm serenity at sight of it instead of being inspired with dread and terror. After awhile he continued: "She will only be sorry if I do. . . . And yet," he added fiercely, "if I don't she will taunt me with my cowardice." This thought thrilled him with a savage determination and with a mighty effort he gathered himself for the leap. A moment only he stood poised on the brink, then plunged into the cold, cold waters. He uttered a sharp cry, but it was drowned in the splash. Then he struggled with the waves, striking out wildly with his arms, and a moment later leaped out and seized a towel. "There!" he exclaimed, triumphantly. "Next time I tell my wife I'm going to take a cold bath before breakfast she'll know it's no bluff."

HATS IMPROVE WITH AGE.

Economy in the Purchase of First-Class Silk Headgear.

"A silk hat, like wine, improves with age," said a clubman. "The oftener you have it ironed the sleeker and more brilliant it becomes. It costs a good deal at the outset, but in the end it is the cheapest hat to wear. It lasts, you see, so long, and to iron it costs so little—a dime or so. Some folks think the topper very perishable. If it gets soaked with rain, if some one sits on it and crushes it into an accordion, they think it must be thrown away, the same as if it were a Derby. But not at all. A silk hat can be taken apart and put together again like a watch, and if it gets crushed, nothing is easier than to melt off the silk, straighten out the frame and then put on the silk again. In England, the home of this hat, I have known men to wear the same topper for 10 or 12 years. And the oftener the old hat is ironed the brighter and finer it shines. Its luster increases with time and friction like the luster of good, antique furniture."

Witness Neatly Tricked.

The chief witness against John Connor for the murder of a man in Cork was the accused's hat, which was found beside the corpse. The policeman who found the hat was cross-examined thus by Daniel O'Connell: "You swear the hat now in my hand is the identical hat you found beside the body of the murdered man?" he asked the policeman. "I do." "You know it to be the prisoner's hat?" "I do." "You knew it from the name inside," said O'Connell, looking into the hat and proceeding to spell slowly "J-o-h-n C-o-n-n-o-r." "I did," replied the policeman. "Now, my lord and gentlemen of the jury, just see for yourselves how much this man's oath is worth," said O'Connell handing up the hat to the judge. "There's no name at all inside the hat." The prisoner won.

Gambling in Rain.

Like the Chinese, the natives of India are greatly addicted to gambling. They have, indeed, one form of wager which is peculiar to the country, and which consists in betting on the weather. This is called "sutta," and has one advantage over most forms of gambling in that there is no possibility of cheating, since there is no chance of controlling the results. The sportsmen make wagers whether it will rain or not, and also how much rain will fall, the latter question being settled by rain gauges. There is great excitement on cloudy days. The gamblers rush to the offices or "dens" and record their bets with the bookmakers. Then, if the expected downpour comes, anxious groups assemble round the rain gauges. Even horse-racing, it is said, has not more fascination for some of the gamblers.

Use of Lion's Mane.

The lion's mane, like the human hand, serves a distinct use. The lion, without it, would soon die out. The jungle is the lion's hunting ground. Here he stalks the buffalo and other such creatures, leaping on their backs to slay them. They tear madly away, and in their flight strive to scrape off the lion against tree trunks and boughs. But his mane protects him. Without it the bumps and knocks he receives in that wild ride would infallibly make him fall unconscious to the ground. In fighting his mane also protects the lion, safeguarding his throat against the longest, sharpest claws.

MR. PERKINS BADLY BEATEN AT COUNTY PRIMARIES

Crushing Defeat Administered to Aspirant for Fourth Assembly Nomination, Only 27 of 140 Delegates Being Pledged to the Warring Legislator.

WESTFIELD GIVES HIM A SOLID DELEGATION

But His Home Town Only Has 8 Votes; Rahway, 3; Plainfield, 9; Cranford, 3; Roselle, 2 Possibly; Elizabeth, 2 maybe; Summit in Doubt—Perkins Thoroughly Thrashed Elsewhere—C. B. Pierce Will Be His Successor.

Of the 140 delegates to the County Convention, only twenty-seven are likely to be in favor of helping Assemblyman Randolph Perkins realize his desire to return to Trenton, as a result of yesterday's primaries in Union county. In other words, Mr. Perkins is in the position of an also-ran. He is shy something like 45 votes of the total necessary to nomination. As a corrolary to that, Carlton B. Pierce, of Cranford, isn't shy any votes. He will be named.

Only in Westfield did Mr. Perkins make a showing befitting a campaign to beat the organization. He got all the eight votes there, uncontested. In the other places where he has delegates, he must content himself with fragments of the delegations. He was defeated wherever there was a contest.

In this city nine of the twenty-seven delegates are for Perkins. In Cranford, the home of Mr. Pierce, the Westfield aspirant, curiosly enough, won three delegates; they come from the first district. Rahway gave him three delegates, uncontested. In Summit the Colbyites and the regulars divided the delegates. The Colbyites may support Perkins.

In Elizabeth two delegates in the first district of the Ninth word may fall in the Perkins bag, but in the Second ward, where he tried to get support in the face of opposition, he was beaten. Two delegates in Roselle are said to be probably for him.

Perkins' campaign has had its effect in a direction other than that of the assembly. Director Benjamin King, of the Board of Freeholders, is ambitious to become surrogate and it is expected that the Perkins delegates will support him against Surrogate Parrot, who seeks renomination. Mr. King's friends have started to strengthen his cause throughout the county. Some of them were in this city today. They approached several of the prominent workers, pointing out the many virtues of Mr. King, and the extreme fairness and desirability of making him surrogate. It is reported that Captain Robert Kirkland, of Elizabeth, is fighting for King. According to rumors current in political circles, if Parrot withdraws another man from Elizabeth will be brought out to defeat the Freeholder's director. It is not thought possible, however, that Parrot is in any danger of defeat at the County Convention.

ALL QUIET IN BOROUGH

One Feeble Attempt to Made Cut in on Walter Linbarger.

VOTE WAS VERY LIGHT

Scarcely More Than 150 Votes of Both Parties Cast—Not a Ripple on the Republican Stream.

Not a great deal of interest was manifested in the primary elections in North Plainfield. Factional difference doesn't figure in the Republican ranks this year, and the Democrats, whatever their feelings and friendships, had only one ticket to work on. There was an abortive effort to change the face of it in two spots, but Walter Linbarger, who had most to do with making that ticket up, found nothing much to worry about during the day.

Ten votes were cast against Mr. Linbarger as candidate for county committeeman in the Second district. They were for T. McDonough. In the Second district, John T. Case, delegate to the county convention, was cut for William N. Pangborn. Mr. Linbarger says D. J. Carney tried to do some still hunting. Mr. Carney denied vigorously this morning that he had anything at all to do with the election.

Samuel Townsend, nominated for Mayor on both tickets, now stands as the virtual mayor-elect. The parties will have councilmanic seats, freeholdership and collectorship to do battle over. A total of 154 ballots was cast.

The vote:

First Dirtrict.

Republican—Total votes, 25. For Mayor, Samuel Townsend, 25; for Councilman, Charles L. Nichols, 25, Lemuel B. Woolston, 25; for Collector, J. H. Cooley, 25; for freeholder, Andrew Lutkins, 22, L. E. Barkelew, 1; for constable, Lemuel W. Pope, 24; delegates to County Convention, Thomas Dowd, 25; Isaac P. Runyon, 25; B. A. Hegeman, Jr., 25; Newton B. Smalley, 25; delegates to State Convention, Charles A. Reed, 25; Edmund Rushmore, 25.

Democratic—Total votes, 53. For mayor, samuel Townsend, 52; for councilmen, Frank C. Krewson, 53; William H. Ludlow, 50; for collecton of taxes, H. B. Tapscott, 52; for justice of the peace, David D. Smalley, 53; for freeholder, John Emmons, 49; delegates to the County Convention, John T. Case, 37; W. J. Kiely, 45; Wm. H. Pangborn, 15; delegate to State Convention, William L. Saunders, 52; member of County Committee, Robert Trewin, 49.

Second District.

Republican—Total votes, 27; rejected, 1. For mayor, Samuel Townsend, 27; delegates to State convention, J. J. Stahl, 27, L. B. Woolston, 27; for freeholder, Andrew Lutkins, 26; delegates to county convention, J. K. Arnold, 26, W. C. Smith, 26, Barzillia Waldron, 27; W. T. Williams, 27; for councilmen, Charles L. Nichols, 27, L. B. Woolston, 27; for collector, G. F. Brown, 27; for assessor, J. H. Cooley, 27; for constable, Lemuel W. Pope, 27.

Democratic—Total votes, 49; rejected 1. For mayor, Samuel Townsend, 47; delegate to State convention, S. S. Swackhamer, 47; for freeholdre, John Emmons, 47; delegates to county convention, Frank Mobus, 45, David Bodine, 45; for councilmen, Frank Krewson, 48, William H. Ludlow, 48; for collector, H. B. Tapscott; for justice of the peace, D. S. Smalley; member county committee, Walter Linbarger, 37, T. McDonough, 10.

QUIET AT PLAINS.

No Contests and a Light Vote; Unpledged Delegates.

Little interest in the primary election was shown at Scotch Plains. Only 45 votes were cast; 30 Republican and 15 Democratic. No cutting was indulged in. The $800 police appropriation on the Republican ticket was scratched some, but not enough to defeat it. The candidates on both tickets are as follows: The delegates to State and county convention all go unpledged.

Republican—Dele to State convention George Ball; delegates to county convention, James E. Johnston, Edward L. Hand; member of county committee, George H. Johnston; for township committee, Henry C. Meyer; for constable, Robert Walpole, H. Clifford Smith; for overseer of the poor, William H. Hull; for surveyors of the highways, Andrew Schaffer, William H. Hull; repair of roads, $2,500; repair of sidewalks, $300; support of poor, $500; fire department, $200; police department, $800.

Democratic—Delegate to State convention, Charles H. French; delegate to county convention, John Z. Hatfield; for township committee, Richard Peniston; for surveyors of the highways, Samuel F. Lee,Charles H. French; repair of roads, $2,500; support of poor, $400; fire department, $100; police department, $200.

Mayor Joe in the Dark.

The burning issue of the primaries at Berkeley Heights yesterday was electric lights. City Judge Bill Jeffery, of that thriving village, won out in the Republican primaries to have an appropriation included for the purpose by Mayor Joe Kuntz, who has the fastest mares in that section failed to get an appropriation for the purpose endorsed by the Democrats.

Wealthy Young Plainfielder Takes Miss Ruth Stillman As His Bride.

TO TOUR THE WORLD

Following Ceremony at Alfred, N. Y., Couple Leave for a Ten Months' Trip—To Reside Here.

Miss Ruth Stillman, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Charles Stillman, and George L. Babcock, Plainfield's wealthiest young man, were married at the home of the bride's parents in Alfred, N. Y., at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon in the presence of a society gathering numbering several hundred. Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city, officiated, assistted by Rev. L. C. Randolph, pastor of the Alfred Seventh-day Baptist church. Miss Elizabeth Stillman, a sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Edwin More Daniel, 2d, of this city, was best man.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white chiffon over white silk, trimmed with rose point lace, and carried white chrysanthemums. At her throat she wore a large diamond and pearl brooch, the gift of the groom. The maid of honor wore white chiffon over blue silk and carried forget-me-nots. The bride's mother wore pearl crepe de chine, and the groom's mother, Mrs. George H. Babcock, was gowned in lavender crepe de chine, trimmed with duchesse lace. The house was gorgeously decorated with chrysanthemums, ferns and white roses.

After the wedding reception Mr. and Mrs. Babcock left in their fifty horse power runabout for a Southern trip. They will go to Arizona and will visit California, Mexico, Japan and China before returning home next July.

Among the guests present were Mrs. T. W. Rogers, of New London, Conn.; Mrs. David Cressler, of Hagerstown, Md.; Mr. and Mrs. William Rich Geary, of Hornell, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Alvord B. Clarke, of Cleveland, O.; Prof. and Mrs. P. E. Titsworth, of Madison, Wis.; A. Neil Annas, of Boston, Mass.; Mrs. George H. Babcock, Miss Myra L. Clarke, Miss Mollie P. Slocum, and Dr. Martha Stillman, all of Plainfield.

Rev. C. E. Scudder—April 7.

In speaking yesterday of the marriage of William Van Sickle and Miss Mason, mention was made that Rev. C. E. Scudder, who was reported to have married them, was not a resident of Newark. Mr. Van Sickle has a handsome wedding certificate which shows that the couple were married Sunday, April 7, 1907, by Rev. C. E. Scudder, pastor of the Methodist church, of Belleville, a suburb of Newark.

COLBY LOST STRONGHOLD

Regulars' Sweeping Victory in Essex County Kills Sommer's Gubernatorial Boom.

HUDSON ALSO REGULAR

Fagan Wins Fourth Nomination for Mayor Despite Boss Dickinson, But Latter Controls County Convention.

The Republican organization defeated the Colbyite wing of the party in Essex county in yesterday's primary election. The prediction of Chairman Alfred N. Dalyrymple, of the Republican county committee, made on the eve of the battle, that he would carry two-thirds of the 219 election districts of Essex, proved to be based on a knowledge of the situation.

In Newark the Regulars of the G. O. P. swept most of the wards, although the New Idea wing of the party gave a good account of itself in its old strongholds. The result in the Republican ranks means the nomination of Justice J. Franklin Fort, of the Supreme Court, for Governor, according to Chairman Dalrymple. Sommer is thus annihilated and Carl Lentz is a delegate to the State convention.

Mayor Mark M. Fagan, despite the great odds against him and the desperate efforts of the machine Republicans of Jersey City, decisively defeated Samuel D. Dickinson last night. The Mayor will take into the city convention, which will renominate him for the fourth term as Mayor, 115 delegates to 85 for Mitchell, the colonel's candidate.

The Regular Republican organization was easily victorious in Hoboken, Bayonne and all the North Hudson townships except West Hoboken, and will control the county convention and the naming of the Assemblymen.

Mrs. Letitia H. Monsell.

Mrs. Letitia H. Monsell, wife of Charles H. Monsell, died this morning at her home on Clinton avenue, following a long illness. She had been a resident of Plainfield for many years and had a large acquaintance. A husband, two sons and a daughter survive. Announcement of funeral will be made later.

Democrats Not Interested.

The Democrats in Union county took very little interest in the primaries yesterday. There were no contests in any part of the county. Their delegates to the State convention are pledged to James E. Martine, of this city, for governor.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Clark, of Woodland avenue, have returned from their summer outing att Spring Lake.

Somerset County Board of Freeholders Provides Standing Reward for Capture.

RATE IS $200 PER HEAD

Bids Received and Contracts Awarded at Meeting Held in Court Room at Somerville Yesterday.

Much business was transacted at the regular meeting of the Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders in the court room in Somerville yesterday afternoon. The following bids were opened for the heating, plumbing and electrical layout for the new court house: William H. Fissell, of New York, $11,900; Allen B. Laing Company, of Plainfield, for electric lighting, $2,470; Den. J. Galbraith, of Plainfield, for the plumoing, $6,175; same, for heating, $5,915; Herman F. Maasbrugger, of Somerville, for heating, $6,181.

The contract was awarded to William H. Fissell & Co., of New York, at their bid of $11,900, it being $2,490 lower than the three lowest separate bidders. The director was authorized to execute the contract.

Prosecutor John F. Reger appeared before the board and in a brief speech asked thatt a reward be offered for the apprehension and conviction of any person guilty of horse stealing in the county.

Mr. Fitzga offered a resolution to the effect that a reward of $250 be offered for the apprehension and conviction of any person guilty of the theft of any horse in this county at any time within three years—the said reward to be payable two months after such conviction and limited to three convictions. The director and clerk are authorized to publish the notice of this resolution in the newspapers of the county for two months. The resolution was passed.

A communication was received from W. H. Page in reference to applying oil upon the country road upon which his property in Bernards township abuts. It was placed on file.

County Collector Allen was authorized to borrow $20,000 in anticipation of taxes. The contractors were required to furnish a bond of $3,000 for the performance of the contract for installing the heating, plumbing and electrical apparatus in the new court house.

Bids were opened for the construction of the Miller and Layton bridges between Bedminster and Larger crossroads in Bedminster township. The contracts for both bridges were awarded to Philhower & Kinkle, of Peapack, at their bids, and the director was authorized to execute the contract.

REGULARS TRIUMPH AT THE REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES

Organization Will Control City Convention and Will Have a Majority of Delegates at the County and State Conventions, Colbyites Being Badly Routed in Contested Districts.

COUNTY COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN SMITH IS ELECTED

Gloak and Buxton Both Defeat Their Colbyite Opponents for Ward Councilmen—New Idea's Councilmen-at-Large Slate Smashed—Hetfield, Jr., Carries First Ward for the Regulars—Perkins Loses Plainfield.

In this city yesterday, the Colbyites met with an utter rout in their attempt to wrest the First and Fourth wards from the regular Republican organization and as a result Assemblyman Perkins failed to get a majority of delegates from Plainfield favoring his renomination for a fourth term in the Legislature while County Chairman Frank H. Smith was triumphantly sent back to the county committee. In no single district of either ward did the Colbyites have a look-in. Particularly was this the case in the First where Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., and his friends swept all before them. Hetfield was warmly thanked by the city leaders for his great work.

The regular organization will control the city convention thus insuring the defeat of Colbyites' candidates for councilmen-at-large, including R. Henry Depew, the president of the Plainfield Protective Association and their candidate for the mayoralty nomination a year ago. They will also have final say in all other local matters at the convention but no opposition will be made to the candidacy of William N. Runyon for renomination to the city judgeship.

In the First ward, William L. Gloak badly defeated his opponent, I. B. Hill and has been renominated for ward councilman. Over in the Fourth, the same was true with Herbert Buxton who won a big victory over Henry Liefke, his opponent, for ward councilman. There being an agreement on the part of the organization to the Colbyites' tickets in both the Second and Third Wards, Robert E. Hall and Frederic E. Mygatt will be the respective ward councilmen there.

As only in the Fourth ward did the Colbyites pledge their county delegates to Assemblyman Perkins, the Westfielder, has not a single pledged supporter from this city, although it is likely that he will receive the votes of the six delegates from the Second and probably most of the six from the Third ward. It is not impossible, however, that the Third warders will hold a conference before taking any decided stand. The fifteen delegates from the First and Fourth wards will be firm against Perkins.

As to the surrogateship, George T. Parrott, the present incumbent, will likewise receive a majority of delegates from this city. His opponent, Benjamin King, director of the Union county Board of Freeholders, may possible get some support in the Third and the solid delegation from the Second ward. The county delegates will meet at the Casino tonight to caucus. Their preferences for county nominations will come up at that time.

It was after 5 o'clock this morning when the complete returns were on file in the city clerk's office. Long before that time, however, the organization leaders including Factory Inspector Andrew McCardell, County Chairman Frank H. Smith, County Election Board Member Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., former Police Commissioner Amos Andrews, George J. Tobin, Councilman Frank Randolph, Health Board Member Charles Dunham, County Tax Board Secretary William R. Townsend, Sanford Robison, Thomas Hanna and others, gathered to hold a jubilification.

The complete returns follow:

First Ward.

First District—Total vote, 334; Republican, 316; Democratic, 18; rejected, 26.

Republican—Delegates to State Convention: J. F. Buckle, 221; Edward Caldwell, 62; F. W. Dunn, 219; Clarence L. Murphy, 66. Delegates to county convention: C. G. Little, 214; A. F. Raymond, 214; H. C. Van Emburgh, 213; J. C. Allen, 68; W. S. Bullock, 72; Clarence L. Murphy, 71; C. H. Russell, 70. Delegates to city convention: Alva C. Carey, 220; A. W. Pittis, 220; A. F. FLYER'S VICTIM IS DEAD

Lester Shearer Succumbs to Injuries Received When Struck by Train.

UNCONSCIOUS TO LAST

Nephew of Mrs. Lena Hoester Fatally Hurt at Dunellen Grade Crossing Passes Away at Hospital.

Lester Shearer, the nephew of Mrs. Lena Hoester, of Somerset sttreet, who received serious injuries at Dunellen Friday night last, when his rig was run down by a Philadelphia "flyer" on the Prospect avenue crossing of the New Jersey Central, died at Muhlenberg hospital at 11 o'clock this morning. He did not regain consciousness once from the time he was injured and it was noticed by the physicians in charge that he gradually sank into death.

The lad's injuries consisted of several deep scalp wounds, causing concussion of the brain, a fractured arm. There were also internal injuries. When first removed to the hospital the physicians were doubtful of recovery.

The accident which caused the young man's death occurred att the Prospect avenue crossing of the New Jersey Central at Dunellen while he was driving home from New Market. He was held up at the crossing to allow a local train to pass. Then the gates were raised to allow him to drive over, but before he could do so a fast Philadelphia train bore down upon him, killing his team, wrecking the wagon and injuring him. Shearer's home was in Jersey City, where his parents reside, but during the past two years he had made his home with his aunt, Mrs. Hoester, and was employed by her as a driver. He was considered an industrious worker and a careful driver.

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

BUYING ALL TOLL ROADS

State Supervisor Meeker, of this City, Tells of Methods Now Pursued.

MAKE HIGHWAYS FREE

New Jersey Rapidly Clearing Out the Turnpike—How it is Being Done.

New Jersey is rapidly clearing out the turnpikes, which formerly kept the driver of horses and automobiles putting his hand in his pocket and paying tribute to the corporations owning the highways, as well as kept the indigent foot passenger from making detours through property to the imminent danger of his life from firearms in the hands of irate farmers while he escaped the tolls for walking on the earth.

Not so very long ago, the State was honeycombed with these privately owned roads, but in 1901 the legislature passed an act looking to the abolition of the toll road. This act provided that counties could acquire toll roads and turn them open to the public free in the following manner: The freeholders were authorized to pass a resolution to the effect that a certain toll road was wanted for public use. The State road commissioner then would be communicated with, and after two-thirds of the property owners abutting on the road certified that they would part with their interests for ten per cent. of road value the commissioner notified the governor when five commissioners were appointed to make the valuation and try to reach an agreement with the owners of the toll road. If they succeeded in getting a price satisfactory to all, then the State paid one-third of the cost of purchase and the road was turned open to the public as a free road. If they did not succeed in getting satisfactory terms with the toll road owners then the State could do nothing.

The right of condemnation did not exist in this act, and it was soon found that where the toll road owners found the road very profitable, the State could do nothing, nor the county either, because the private owner did not desire to yield up a good thing.

In 1906 the legislature passed a supplement to the 1901 act giving to freeholders the rights of the 1901 act, and adding the right of condemning property of toll road owners for the purpose of making their holdings free highways.

Deputy State Road Commissioner Robert A. Meeker, of this city, said to a reporter when asked what New Jersey had done to free the roads:

"There are now in New Jersey only the following toll roads: Mt. Holly and Jobstown turnpike of gravel six miles long; the Centreton and Hartford turnpike, four miles long, of gravel, both in Burlington county, the Camden and Moorestown turnpike, eight miles long, of stone; the Camden and Marlton turnpike, eight and one-half miles long, of stone; the Camden and Haddonford turnpike, six miles long, of stone, all in Camden county; the Hackensack turnpike, from Little Ferry to Hackensack, four miles long, of stone, and one-half owned by the trolley company in Bergen county, and the Quinton road in Salem county, through Shiloh to Brindenton and Millville in Cumberland county which is about twenty-five miles long and built of gravel.

"Relative to the work of the counties acquiring toll roads, the counties in the northern part of the State have proceeded rapidly under the 1901 act at their own expense, and the State has not been put to any cost in their acquisition. In Monmouth county the Board of Freeholders acquired many roads radiating from Freehold and the State has not been called upon to bear any of the expense.

"The counties with State aid have purchased the following toll roads in South Jersey since 1902: Camden, Ellisburg and Marlton turnpike, one and forty-three hundreds miles, cost $5,670, the State paying one-third of the cost in each of these instances; Westfield and Camden turnpike, five and three-hundreds miles, $12,000, the State practically rebuilding the road after paying its one-third of the purchase price in 1902.

"The Lumberton and Medeld turnpike, three and nine-tenths miles long, was bought by the township alone on the State road commissioner offering to pay one-third of the cost of reconstruction if it was purchased by the township.

"There have also been purchased the Westfield and Camden turnpike, five and ninety-eight hundreds miles, for $29,453, and the Camden and Blackwood turnpike, seven and three-nine hundreds miles, and costing $10,000.

"The Camden and Haddonfield turnpike is wanted by the public and the Camden freeholders have moved in its acquisition. They passed a resolution to buy it June 13, 1906, and everything went well until the five commissioners of the West Jersey Traction Company would not agree to the purchase price, and the freeholders were stopped, as they had proceeded under the 1901 act. On November 14, 1906, however, the Camden freeholders took action under the 1906 act and their determination to acquire this important toll road was approved by the State road commissioner December 4, 1906."

Paris Pattern Hats

Reflected by the Mirror of Fashion.

It is in the Hahne & Co. Millinery Store that you are most likely to see the truly authentic productions of Paris milliners, for not only does our unexcelled connection with the fashion centre put us in close touch with the best things the artist milliners of Paris produce but enables us to present their productions at the earliest possible moment.

We really import hats. A great many stores pretend to. A few get one or two hats. But most of the so-called imported hats have never seen Paris, and the only thing about them is the label.

It is to be expected that if any store in Newark would show genuine imported pattern hats it would be Newark's greatest millinery store. Here you see them in a variety of models satisfying to those who seek novel and original creations.

There are many who do not care for the extreme productions that come from Paris, yet the French models serve them a good purpose, for modifications of the French styles are readily conceived by our expert milliners, and hats often more pleasing than the imported ones are the result.

Every variation of the season's fashions is reflected by the great millinery shop. It is truly a mirror of fashion, and when you are looking for a new hat you cannot afford to pass by the collection here presented.

Trimmed Hats of the more popular sort in the new Fall effects, made of good materials, designed and trimmed with much care and skill and taste, matching in appearance many hats sold at double the price, are specialized by us at $4.75

Trimmed Hats in still prettier styles of finer materials—a generous variety ready to choose from—are in our lines at $7.75 and $9.75

Suit and Tailored Hats—ready to wear; nicely trimmed; some of velvet; some of silk; some of silk and velvet combinations; in all the newest shapes; trimmed in a wide variety of styles; easily worth $6.50; selling at $4.75

THE NEW FOOTBALL RULES

The actual matter of the rules has not been materially changed owing to the satisfaction that was found with the wholesale revision which took place in the rules of 1906. The particular detail of the few alterations follows later.

Meantime, it is worth while to look over the new arrangements and the headings, which will give a fair idea of the general plan.

First come the rules relating to the field and the ball. Then those relating to the number of players and substitutes, then the length of the game and scoring. Following these come definitions of all the terms used. This group of definitions is followed by rules relating to the kick-off and the position of players on scrimmage as well as kick-off, kick-out, punt-out and place-kick, also on free kicks. Then come sections covering the putting of the ball in play and the detail of the game. Following these, unlawful interference with play, obstruction of opponents, passing or throwing the ball, and on- and off-side. Then the rules relating to the necessary gain on downs and distance of the kick, as well as a description of a try-at-goal.

The next two groups govern the conduct of players as well as the conduct of persons other than players. Following these come penalties and the duties of the officials, with brief of rules over which each has control. Appended to these are notes giving briefly the suggestions and interpretations placed on the rules.

The main alterations are as follows: An increased length of the game. Owing to the fact that it was found under the new rules the players were rather less exhausted than in the old game, it was determined to increase the playing time another ten minutes by adding five minutes to each half.

It was voted to continue the method of two umpires, but to define their duties more specifically, so that one would aid the referee in decisions down the field. This one is practically an assistant to the referee and is called the field judge. The other, generally speaking, has control of the decisions that belong to the line-up.

The ten-yard rule is preserved exactly as before, that innovation having met with almost general approval in that it made far less effective anything like mass plays and forced the open play which everyone so much desired.

Forward passing has been altered to a certain extent, making it less risky to use it on the first and second down. Instead of losing the ball in case the forward pass strikes the ground before striking a player of either side, the same side retains possession of the ball by losing fifteen yards in distance. When the forward pass is essayed on the third down, however, and it strikes the ground without striking a player, or is otherwise made illegally, the ball must be surrendered to the other side exactly as formerly.

In order to cover a point upon which there was some discussion last year, the following legislation was enacted: That a line man may carry the ball, provided he does not leave his position in the line until the ball is put in play.

It was also determined that the forward pass or tripping or hurdling by the side that did not put the ball in play in a scrimmage, should be penalized fifteen yards.

In order to more clearly settle the point about the rights of a side on a fair catch, it was enacted that a man should be regarded as having an opportunity to make a fair catch when it was possible for him to reach the ball before it should strike the ground.

In order to prevent signalling by one man and a catch and run by another, it was legislated that if one man of the side signals his intention of making a fair catch, this player may not run with the ball nor is he entitled to the privileges coming from a fair catch, but the ball must be put down at the point where he caught it for a scrimmage by his side.

All questions of hurdling were put within the jurisdiction of the referee.

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

In Union county for the past twenty years, to go no further back, we have had no other kind of an official in charge of our probate business than an experienced lawyer. It is possible, therefore, to speak with authority at this time on the subject of the qualifications for this position. The surrogate's office, under the direction of George T. Parrot, has been so ably conducted that he has been chosen by the people for four successive terms without opposition. There has been absolutely nothing to criticize in Mr. Parrot's handling of the office. His administration, on the other hand, has won the praise of the legal profession and of those outside of it who have had business to transact, without regard to political affiliations—a rather unusual compliment in these days of strenuous politics and scramble for office.—Elizabeth Journal.

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Gates, of First place, have returned from Massachusetts, where they spent their vacation.

Titus Laury, the East Front street contractor, is prepared to furnish estimates on all kind of construction work.

MISS ST. JOHN A BRIDE

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Valois St. John Becomes Wife of Rev. Mr. Loofboro.

DR. SHAW OFFICIATES

Large Gathering of Friends at Seventh-Day Baptist Church to Witness Important Ceremony.

Miss Mary Alice St. John, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Valois, St. John, of Division street, and Rev. Eli Loofboro, pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church, of Riverside, California, were married at 6.30 o'clock, last night in the Seventh-day Baptist church, Rev. George B. Shaw, the pastor, officiating. The ceremony was witnessed by a large gathering of relatives and friends, including many from out-of-town.

The bride was gowned in white silk, trimmed with lace and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses. She also wore a tulle veil. Her attendants were Miss Nellie St. John, her sister, as maid-of-honor, and Miss Mabel Rogers and Miss Mildred Greene, as bridesmaids. The best man was Dr. George Burdick, of Alfred, N. Y., and the ushers were B. F. Whitford, of Stamford, Conn.; Rev. R. B. Tolbert, of New York; Milton St. John, brother of the bride, and Arthur Spiced, of this city.

The bridal party entered the church, while the wedding march was being played on the organ by Miss Jessie Utter, the church organist. The ushers led the way, followed by the maid-of-honor and bridesmaids and then the bride, accompanied by her father, who gave her in marriage. The ceremony was performed with a ring.

The church was lavishly decorated for the wedding, there being a pleasing arrangement of palms, ferns and flowers banked about the pulpit platform in front of which the ceremony was performed.

An informal reception was held afterward at the home of the bride's parents, where a limited number of friends gathered to congratulate the couple. Mr. and Mrs. Loofboro left last night for a wedding journey, which will include many points of interest. They will reach Riverside October 1.

The groom is a native of Welton, Iowa. He was graduated from Milton College, Iowa, in the Class of 1898 and from the theological seminary at Alfred, N. Y., Class 1902. For a time he was pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church, New York, and was later called to the denomination's church at Riverside, Cal., where he has been ever since.

The bride has been especially active as a member of the Seventh-day Baptist church in all its departments. For several years she was the private secretary of Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, while he was editor of the Sabbath Recorder. She was graduated from the Plainfield High School and is a most estimable young woman with a host of friends and acquaintances. She was the recipient of a great many handsome gifts from relatives and friends.

HUNTER ATTACKED BY CATAMOUNTS

MOUNTAINEER RECEIVES 67 CUTS IN BATTLE WITH FIERCE FELINES.

CLOTHES TORN TO RIBBONS

Jim Hoxie Finds Two Kittens and Is About to Take Them Home to Wife When Animals Start Fight.

Panther Knob, W. Va.—Jim Hoxie, one of the oldest and best hunters in the state, was on his way home from Dixon's Crossroads a few days ago following the farther side of Panther mountain. When he arrived at the crossing of Peach run, a small creek which meanders down the mountain about three miles from his home, he noticed two little bobtailed kittens playing in a grassy opening on the bank. Jim decided to catch them and take them home to his wife.

One he quickly caught and chucked into his saddle bags, but not before the kitten had bitten and scratched his hands severely. The other was not so easily captured, but it was cornered at last and put away to keep company with the first. By this time Jim's hands were scratched so badly that he had to tie them up; it was getting late, too, for the sun was going down before Jim had remounted and urged his horse onward.

He had hardly started before he heard, a long distance away, the screech of a wild cat. "Jerusalem!" he muttered. "'Spose that should be the old one!" Another screech sounded, off to the right and nearer. "That's her, durn her! Get up, old gal!"

But he was not to get away so easily. In less time almost than it takes to tell it, something sprang out of the bush into the narrow road in front, while still another yell, following closely on the left, proved that there was not one, but two catamounts getting ready to attack.

"Durn my cats, if there ain't two of 'em—the old she and her mate!" and, old hunter as he was, Jim slipped off his horse and cut himself a good, strong, hickory club, about three feet long.

The short hesitation of the catamounts gave Hoxie time to look around and select his battle ground, for he knew that he would have to fight. He found a big oak close by and backed up against it. He didn't have long to wait.

Jim hardly got straightened up when one of the varmints gave a fierce yell and sprang for his face. Whack! The club struck her and knocked her over, but, almost before the man could recover, the other cat sprang and caught his shoulder in its teeth. Before it could tear him with its claws Jim shortened his club and jammed it against the cat's jaws, knocking it flat.

Jim is a very strong man, quick and active, but the first cat caught his right leg in its jaws and sank its teeth into the flesh before Hoxie could defend himself. One blow, however, delivered with all Jim's power, put the old cat out of business before it could spring again.

By this time the old male had gathered himself again, and before the man could strike the cat was upon him. Jim missed, and for a minute—he says it seemed like lightning—20 long, sharp claws riddled and tore his shirt into strips and rags.

With his stick clutched in his hands, Jim struck fiercely with his fists, hitting the catamount in the face and head, and as it fell backward, driven by the man's desperate blows, his heavy boots played a tattoo on the cat's ribs. One of the savage kicks proved effective. The cat fell with a final screech of pain and rage.

Both catamounts were now down and out. As for Hoxie, he was a sight. His shirt and pants were nothing but ribbons and strings, while from his face down to his knees blood was running from his wounds. There were 67 cuts altogether; some were an inch some three inches, the longest and most painful being three sets of four each, not less than 18 inches long.

RHEUMATIC FOLKS!

Are You Sure Your Kidneys are Well?

Many rheumatic attacks are due to uric acid in the blood. But the duty of the kidneys is to remove all uric acid from the blood. Its presence there shows the kidneys are inactive. Don't dally with "uric acid solvents." You might go on till doomsday with them, but until you cure the kidneys you will never get well. Doan's Kidney Pills not only remove uric acid, but cure the kidneys and then all danger from uric is ended. Here is Plainfield testimony to prove it.

Mrs. C. Rosseter, of 127 Watchung avenue, Plainfield, N. J., says: "Years ago I had backache and headaches, and was troubled also with attacks of rheumatism. On being advised that Doan's Kidney Pills were good for such troubles, I got a supply at Randolph's pharmacy, and found relief soon after I began using them. I now keep them in the house, and use them whenever I feel a twinge of pain in the back or any other symptom of kidney trouble, and it only requires a few doses to chase the pain away. I especially recommend them for rheumatic pain, for my system seemed to be filled with it before I used your medicine."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Millburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

In a few moments more an elderly woman came along, sized up the crowd, and rang for the—but why go on?—Milwaukee Sentinel.

BOB HAMPTON of PLACER

By RANDALL PARRISH AUTHOR OF "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING" "MY LADY OF THE NORTH" "HISTORIC ILLINOIS" ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY A.C. McCLURG & CO.

The soldier's hat still rested on the grass where it had fallen, its military insignia hidden.

"I guess—I know—what I—know," the fellow muttered. "What's—your—regiment?"

"Seventh cavalry."

The man stiffened up as if an electric shock had swept through his limp frame. "The hell!—and—did—she—call you—Brant?"

The young officer's face exhibited his disgust. Beyond doubt that sequestered nook was a favorite lounging spot for the girl, and this disreputable creature had been watching her for some sinister purpose.

"So you have been eavesdropping, have you?" said Brant, gravely. "And now you want to try a turn at defaming a woman? Well, you have come to a poor market for the sale of such goods. I am half inclined to throw you bodily into the creek. I believe you are nothing but a common liar, but I'll give you one chance—you say you know her real name. What is it?"

The eyes of the mummy had become spiteful. "It's—none of—your damn—business. I'm—not under—your orders."

"Under my orders! Of course not; but what do you mean by that? Who and what are you?"

The fellow stood up, slightly humpbacked but broad of shoulder, his arms long, his legs short and somewhat bowed, his chin protruding impudently, and Brant noticed an oddly shaped black scar, as if burned there by powder, on the back of his right hand.

"Who—am I?" he said, angrily. "I'm—Silent—Murphy."

An expression of bewilderment swept across the lieutenant's face. "Silent Murphy! Do you claim to be Custer's scout?"

The fellow nodded. "Heard—of me—maybe?"

Brant stood staring at him, his mind occupied with vague garrison rumors connected with this odd personality. The name had long been a familiar one, and he had often had the man pictured out before him. There could remain no reasonable doubt of his identity, but what was he doing there?

"Yes, I've heard of you,"—and his crisp tone instinctively became that of terse military command,—"although we have never met, for I have been upon detached service ever since my assignment to the regiment. I have a troop in camp below," he pointed down the stream, "and am in command here."

The scout nodded carelessly.

"Why did you not come down there and report your presence in this neighborhood to me?"

Murphy grinned unpleasantly. "Rather be—alone—no report—been over—Black Range—telegraphed—wait orders."

"Do you mean you are in direct communication with headquarters, with Custer?"

The man answered, with a wide sweep of his long arm toward the northwest. "Goin' to—be hell—out there—damn soon."

"How? Are things developing into a truly serious affair—a real campaign?"

"Every buck—in the—Sioux nation—is makin'—fer the—bad lands," and he laughed noiselessly, his nervous fingers gesticulating. "—guess that—means—business."

Brant hesitated. Should he attempt to learn more about the young girl? Instinctively he appreciated the futility of endeavoring to extract information from Murphy, and he experienced a degree of shame at thus seeking to penetrate her secret. He glanced about, seeking some way of recrossing the stream.

"If you require any new equipment," he said tersely, "we can probably supply you at the camp. How do you manage to get across here?"

Murphy, walking stiffly, led the way down the steep slope, and silently pointed out a log bridging the narrow stream. He stood watching while the officer picked his steps across, but made no responsive motion when the other waved his hand from the opposite shore, his sallow face looking grim and unpleasant.

The young officer marched down the road, his mind busied with the peculiar happenings of the morning, and that prospect for early active service hinted at in the brief utterances of the old scout. Brant was a thorough soldier, born into the service and deeply enamored of its dangers; yet beyond this he remained a man, a young man, swayed by those emotions which when at full tide sweep aside all else appertaining to life.

His had been a lonely life since leaving West Point and joining his regiment—a life passed largely among rough men and upon the desolate plains. For months at a time he had known nothing of refinement, nor enjoyed social intercourse with the opposite sex. Yet, beneath his mask of impassibility, the heart continued to beat with fierce desire, biding the time when it should enjoy its own sweet way. Perhaps that hour had already dawned; certainly something new, something inspiring, had now come to awaken an interest unfelt before, and leave him idly dreaming of shadowed eyes and flushed, rounded cheeks.

He was in this mood when he overtook the Rev. Howard Wynkoop and marked the thoughtful look upon his pale face.

"I called at your camp," explained Wynkoop, after the first words of greeting had been exchanged, "as soon as I learned you were here in command, but only to discover your absence. The sergeant, however, was very courteous, and assured me there would be no difficulty in arranging a religious service for the men, unless sudden orders should arrive. No doubt I may rely on your cooperation."

"Most certainly," was the cordial response, "and I shall also permit those desiring to attend your regular Sunday services so long as we are stationed here. How is your work prospering?"

"There is much to encourage me, but spiritual progress is slow, and there are times when my faith falters and I feel unworthy of the service in which I am engaged."

"A mining camp is so intensely material seven days of the week that it must present a difficult field for the awakening of any religious sentiment," confessed Brant sympathetically. "I have often wondered how you consented to bury your talents in such a place."

The other smiled, but with a trace of sadness in his eyes. "I firmly believe that every minister should devote a portion of his life to the doing of such a work as this. It is both a religious and a patriotic duty, and there is a rare joy connected with it."

"Yet it was surely not joy I saw pictured within your face when we met; you were certainly troubled over some problem."

Wynkoop glanced up quickly, a slight flush rising in his pale cheeks. "Perplexing questions which must be decided off-hand are constantly arising. And just now I scarcely know what action to take regarding certain applications for church membership."

Brant laughed. "I hardly consider myself a competent adviser in matters of church policy," he admitted, "yet I have always been informed that all so desiring are to be made welcome in religious fellowship."

"Theoretically, yes." And the minister stopped still in the road, facing his companion. "But this special case presents certain peculiarities. The applicants, as I learn from others, are not leading lives above reproach. So far as I know, they have never even attended church service until last Sunday, and I have some reason to suspect an ulterior motive. I am anxious to put nothing in the way of any honestly seeking soul, yet I confess that in these cases I hesitate."

"But your elders? Do not they share the responsibility of passing upon such applications?"

The flush on Mr. Wynkoop's cheeks deepened, and his eyes fell. "Ordinarily, yes; but in this case I fear they may prove unduly harsh. I—I feel—that these applications came through the special intercession of a certain young lady, and I am anxious not to hurt her feelings in any way, or to discourage her enthusiasm."

"Oh, I see! Would you mind telling me the names of the two gentlemen?"

"Mr. John Moffat and Mr. William McNeil. Unfortunately, I know neither personally."

"And the young lady?"

"A Miss Phoebe Spencer; she has but lately arrived from the east to take charge of our new school—a most interesting and charming young woman, and she is proving of great assistance to me in church work."

The lieutenant cleared his throat and emitted a sigh of suddenly awakened memory. "I fear I can offer you no advice, for if, as I begin to suspect,—though she sought most bravely to avoid the issue and dispatch me upon a false trail,—she prove to be that same fascinating young person I met this morning, my entire sympathies are with the gentlemen concerned. I might even be strongly tempted to do likewise at her solicitation."

"You? Why, you arrived only this morning, and do you mean to say you have met already?"

"I at least suspect as much, for there can scarcely exist two in this town who will fill the description. My memory holds the vision of a fair young face, vivacious, ever changing in its expression, yet constantly both piquant and innocent; a perfect wealth of hair, a pair of serious eyes hiding mysteries within their depths, and lips which seem made to kiss. Tell me, is not this a fairly drawn portrait of your Miss Spencer?"

The minister gripped his hands nervously together. "Your description is not unjust; indeed, it is quite accurate from a mere outer point of view, yet beneath her vivacious manner I have found her thoughtful, and possessed of deep spiritual yearnings. In the east she was a communicant of the Episcopal church."

Brant did not answer him at once. He was studying the minister's downcast face; but when the latter finally turned to depart, he inquired, "Do you expect to attend the reception to-morrow evening?"

Wynkoop stammered slightly. "I—I could hardly refuse under the circumstances; the committee sent me an especially urgent invitation, and I understand there is to be no dancing until late. One cannot be too straightlaced out here."

"Oh, never mind apologizing. I see no reason why you need hesitate to attend. I merely wondered if you could procure me an invitation."

"Did she tell you about it?"

"Well, she delicately hinted at it, and, you know, things are pretty slow here in a social way. She merely suggested that I might possibly meet her again there."

"Of course; it is given in her honor."

"So I understood, although she sought to deceive me into the belief that she was not the lady. We met purely by accident, you understand, and I am desirous of a more formal presentation."

The minister drew in his breath sharply, but the clasp of his extended hand was not devoid of warmth. "I will have a card of invitation sent you at the camp. The committee will be very glad of your presence; only I warn you frankly regarding the lady, that competition will be strong."

"Oh, so far as that is concerned I have not yet entered the running," laughed Brant, in affected carelessness, "although I must confess my sporting proclivities are somewhat aroused."

He watched the minister walking rapidly away, a short, erect figure, appearing slender in his severely cut black cloth. "Poor little chap," he muttered, regretfully. "He's hard hit. Still, they say all's fair in love and war."

CHAPTER XIV.

In Honor of Miss Spencer.

Mr. Jack Moffat, president of the Bachelor Miners' Pleasure club, had embraced the idea of a reception for Miss Spencer with unbounded enthusiasm. Indeed, the earliest conception of such an event found birth within his fertile brain, and from the first he determined upon making it the most notable social function ever known in that portion of the territory.

The large space above the Occidental was secured for the occasion, the obstructing subdivisions knocked away, an entrance constructed with an outside stairway leading up from a vacant lot, and the passage connecting the saloon boarded up. Incidentally, Mr. Moffat took occasion to announce that if "any snoozer got drunk and came up them stairs" he would be thrown bodily out of a window. Mr. McNeil, who was observing the preliminary proceedings with deep interest from a pile of lumber opposite, sarcastically intimated that under such circumstances the attendance of club members would be necessarily limited. Mr. Moffat's reply it is manifestly impossible to quote literally. Mrs. Guffy was employed to provide the requisite refreshments in the palatial dining-hall of the hotel, while Buck Mason, the vigilant town marshal, popularly supposed to know intimately the face of every "rounder" in the territory, agreed to collect the cards of invitation at the door, and bar out obnoxious visitors.

The invited guests arrived from the sparsely settled regions round about, not a few riding for a hundred miles over the hard trails. The majority came early, arrayed in whatsoever apparel their limited wardrobes could supply, but ready for any wild frolic. The men outnumbered the gentler sex five to one, but every feminine representative within a radius of about 50 miles, whose respectability could possibly pass muster before the investigations of a not too critical invitation committee, was present.

Lieut. Brant was somewhat delayed in reaching the scene. Certain military requirements were largely responsible for this delay, and he had patiently wrestled with an unsatisfactory toilet, mentally excoriating a service which would not permit the transportation of dress uniforms while on scouting detail.

The dance was already in full swing when he finally pushed his way through the idle loungers gathered about the door, and gained entrance to the hall. Many glanced curiously at him, attracted by the glitter of his uniform, but he recognized none among them, and therefore passed steadily toward the musicians' stand, where there appeared to be a few unoccupied chairs.

The scene was one of color and action. He watched the speeding figures, striving to distinguish the particular one whose charms had lured him thither. But among them all he was unable to distinguish the woodnymph whose girlish frankness and grace had left so deep an impression on his memory. Yet surely she must be present, for, to his understanding, this whole gay festival was in her honor. Directly across the room he caught sight of Rev. Mr. Wynkoop conversing with a lady of somewhat rounded charms, and picked his way in their direction.

The missionary, who, in truth, had been hiding an agonized heart behind a smiling face, was only too delighted at any excuse which would enable him to approach Miss Spencer, and press aside those cavaliers who were monopolizing her attention. The handicap of not being able to dance he felt to be heavy, and he greeted the lieutenant with unusual heartiness of manner.

"Why, most assuredly, my dear sir, most assuredly," he said. "Mrs. Herndon, permit me to make you acquainted with Lieut. Brant of the Seventh cavalry."

The two, thus introduced, bowed and exchanged a few words, while Mr. Wynkoop busied himself in peering about the room, making a great pretense at searching out the lady guest, who, in very truth, had scarcely been absent from his sight during the entire evening.

"Ah!" he ejaculated, "at last I locate her, and, fortunately, at this moment she is not upon the floor, although positively hidden by the men clustering about her chair. You will excuse us, Mrs. Herndon, but I have promised Lieut. Brant a presentation to your niece."

They slipped past the musicians' stand, and the missionary pressed in through the ring of admirers.

"Why, Mr. Wynkoop!" and she extended both hands impulsively. "And only to think, you have never once been near me all this evening! You don't know how much I have missed you. I was just saying to Mr. Moffat—or it might have ben Mr. McNeil—that I was completely tired out and wished you were here to sit out this dance with me."

Wynkoop blushed and forgot the errand which had brought him there, but she remained sufficiently cool and observant. She touched him gently with her hand.

"Who is that fine-looking young officer?" she questioned softly, yet without venturing to remove her glance from his face.

Mr. Wynkoop started. "Oh, exactly; I had forgotten my mission. He has requested an introduction." He drew the lieutenant forward. "Lieut. Brant, Miss Spencer."

The officer bowed, a slight shadow of disappointment in his eyes. The lady was unquestionably attractive, her face animated, her reception most cordial, yet she was not the maiden of the dark, fathomless eyes and the wealth of auburn hair.

"Such a pleasure to meet you," exclaimed Miss Spencer. "Do you know, lieutenant, that actually I have never before had the privilege of meeting an officer of the army. Your appearance supplies the one touch of color that was lacking to make the picture complete. Mr. Moffat has done so much to make me realize the breadth of western experience, and now, I do so hope, you will some time find opportunity to recount to me some of your army exploits."

The lieutenant smiled. "Most gladly; yet just now, I confess, the music invites me, and I am sufficiently bold to request your company upon the floor."

Miss Spencer sighed regretfully. "Why, really, Lieut. Brant, I scarcely see how I possibly can. I have already refused so many this evening, and now I almost believe I must be under direct obligation to some one of those gentlemen. Still," hesitatingly, "your being a total stranger here must be taken into consideration. Mr. Moffat, Mr. McNeil, Mr. Mason, surely you will grant me release this once?"

There was no verbal response to the appeal, only an uneasy movement; but her period of waiting was extremely brief.

"Oh, I knew you would; you have all been so kind and considerate." She arose, resting her daintily gloved hand upon Brant's blue sleeve, her pleased eyes smiling up confidingly into his. Then with a charming smile, "Oh, Mr. Wynkoop, I have decided to claim your escort to supper. You do not care?"

Wynkoop bowed, his face like a poppy.

"I thought you would not mind obliging me in this. Come, lieutenant."

Miss Spencer, when she desired to be, was a most vivacious companion, and always an excellent dancer. Brant easily succumbed to her sway, and became, for the time being, a victim to her charms. To Brant the experience brought back fond memories of his last cadet ball at the Point, and he hesitated to break the mystic spell with abrupt questioning. Curiosity, however, finally mastered his reticence.

"Miss Spencer," he asked, "may I inquire if you possess such a phenomenon as a 'star' pupil?"

The lady laughed merrily, but her expression became somewhat puzzled. "Really, what a very strange question! Why, not unless it might be little Sammy Worrell; he can certainly use the longest words I ever heard of outside a dictionary. Why, may I ask? Are you especially interested in prodigies?"

REGULARS UNOPPOSED IN SOMERSET COUNTY

FRELINGHUYSEN A DELEGATE TO STATE CONVENTION.

The primary election in Bridgewater township, which includes the towns of Somerville, Raritan and Martinsville, in Somerset county, was a tame affair. Only about a third of the voters went near the polls. The Democrats made no nominations for any township office except in the First Ward of Raritan.

On the Democratic ticket delegates elected to the Democratic State convention are Cornelius Crecdan, Clarence Garretson, John A. Frech, Alvah A. Clark, Jacob Shurtz and Fred C. Bart. Delegates to the Republican State convention are Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, William H. Wyckoff, C. H. Bateman, William H. Cawley, H. W. Rensswig, E. H. Weldon and J. Albert Schneider. The Colbyites made no effort this fall to secure any delegates nor are they taking part in the campaign.

LITERARY

Those who have been familiar with the Burr McIntosh Monthly in its small form are surprised that the very slight enlargement should have added so greatly to the beauty of the magazine. The September number is the second issue of the new form and contains the usual quota of exquisite portraits of stage celebrities and of people of note, both men and women.

Upon a tract of about 600 acres near Murfreesboro, in Pike county, Southwestern Arkansas, some 100 miles from the city of Little Rock, more than 130 diamonds have been found within the past year. In size, they vary from 1-64 carat to 6½ carats; in color, from dark brown to the high-prized blue-white. From "Has Kansas a Diamond Field?" by Robert S. Lanier, in the American Review of Reviews for September.

WATCHUNG RESULTS.

Democrats Make Up Ticket With Care; Republican Nominations.

Deeply interested citizens filled the old mill at Watchung last night to learn the result of the Democratic endeavor to place strong candidates in nomination for the coming election. This ticket was named:

Delegates to State Convention, Francis E. Bodin, delegate to county convention, George Mobus; for town committeemen, Theodore A. H. Luerssen; for surveyors of highways, John Mobus, Roy Smith; for roads, $2,000; for poor, $600; for committeemen's salary, $50.

The Republicans put through the following ticket:

Delegate to State convention, Dr. Richard Moldenke; Delegate to county Convention, A. P. Voorhees; for town committeemen, William H. Titus; for surveyors of highways, Hippolyte Texier, Frederick H. Herkstroter; pound keepers, Emil Clementz, Soren Sorensen; appropriations for roads, $2,000; poor, $600; repair of sidewalk from Watchung to Johnston Drive, $100; salary of committeemen, $75.

CHATHAM.

The parochial school attached to St. Patrick's church is now open and the work of the fall has begun. The attendance is larger than ever and now includes practically every Catholic child in the town. In order to meet the demand for a higher grade education in parochial schools, Rev. W. O. Keyes, the rector, who has given the matter much study, has engaged another teacher, which will make possible another class and the lengthening of the study periods.

Martin, the 5-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Callahan, met with a serious accident Monday. While walking on the railroad track, near the station, with his aunt, he fell, cutting a gash under his chin on a piece of jagged iron. He was taken to the nearest doctor, who sewed up the wound.

WESTFIELD.

Lewis S. Theis has withdrawn his objections to the assessment of benefits and damages for the Westfield trunk sewer through his property. The other objectors who employed counsel to combat the assessment still maintain their position.

C. H. Lockwood has secured options on the property between the Lambert tract and Railway avenue in Westfield, and proposes, when the purchase is completed, to lay out streetts to join those in the Lambert tract.

Miss Elizabeth Ratchford and William Stryker were married at Holy Trinity rectory Saturday night.

— Fine canning peaches, barlett pears, plums and crabapples at Neuman Bros.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Case, of Craig place, returned home yesterday after a delightful trip of ten weeks abroad.

Mrs. H. C. Reynolds and son, Herbert Reynolds, of Church street, left today to visit relatives at Toms River and Lakewood for two weeks.

DUKE BREAKS A STRIKE

Settled in Hour Fight of Italian Hod Carriers Who Tried to Drive Off Non-Unionists.

A THREAT TO KILL MADE

Tobacco King, Who Is Building $75,000 Addition to His Summer Mansion, Summons Police.

James B. Duke, president of the American Tobacco Tobacco Company, who employs several hundred laborers and skilled mechanics on his estate at Raritan and has a payroll of $8,000 a week, made a record as a strike-breaker yesterday by landing seventeen union hod carriers in the county jail and breaking the back of what intended to be an extensive strike before it was an hour old.

Mr. and Mrs. Duke recently returned to their summer home at Raritan after an automobile wedding tour through the Eastern States. Mr. Duke is now superintending the construction of an addition to his mansion that is to cost $75,000. In order to push the work the contractors Tuesday imported an additional number of bricklayers from a nearby city, but failed to get a sufficient number of hod-carriers to serve them.

Manager Smith, of the Duke estate, put a number of Italian laborers employed on the place at work carrying hods to help out. The union hod carriers, who are also Italians, threatened to strike if the men were kept on the job. Mr. Duke refused to take his men off and a strike followed.

Yesterday morning eighteen union hod-carriers marched to the Duke mansion, drove the non-union laborers from the job and guarded the building to keep other non-union men from work. All work on the building stopped.

It was then that Mr. Duke personally conducted the warfare against the strikers. Special detectives and constables were summoned, who swooped down on the strikers, and fifteen of them were placed in wagons and driven to the county jail. Former Congressman Alvah A. Clark, Mr. Duke's counsel, was summoned to prepare a complaint against the men. Three of the laborers who were driven from their work charges the prisoners with assault and threats to take their lives. Manager Smith also made an affidavit charging the strikers with conspiring to damage the Duke property.

Justice Sutphen held the prisoners to await the action of the Grand Jury under $600 bonds each. The friends of the strikers are hustling for bondsmen to get them out of jail.

During the morning there was a survey of the year's work by the various township secretaries, department superintendents and the county secretary. A symposium was conducted by Jacob Wyckoff on the preparation of teachers. Rev. E. M. Fergusson, of Newark, the State secretary, made an address on "Problems and How They Are Being Solved." This was followed by various conferences.

Yesterday afternoon there was several addresses and the convention will close after a talk by Miss Rose Scott, the State elementary superintendent, on the topic, "What Next." Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan, of Central Methodist church, Newark, will make the annual address on "Consecrated Personality in the World's Work."

MISS EDNA BURR A BRIDE

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. DeV. Burr Becomes Wife of Charles W. Buckalew

AT HOME WEDDING

Ceremony Performed by Rev. E. Vicar Stevenson—Couple Leave for Their Honeymoon Trip.

Miss Edna Burr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel De Vere Burr, of Central avenue, and Charles William Buckalew, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Buckalew, of West Fifth street, were quietly married at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's parents. Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, rector of Grace church, performed the ceremony. Only the members of the immediate families were present at the wedding, and the only attendant was Hudson C. Burr, brother of the bride, who was best man.

An informal reception followed. Later the couple left for a wedding journey. They will reside at 25 Rockview avenue, the borough, upon their return. The bride was the recipient of a wealth of gifts from relatives and friends.

The bride was graduated from the Plainfield High School in the class of 1900. In 1901 she entered Mt. Holyoke College, from which she was graduated in the class of '05. LANDLORD BOTTLED UP.

Squats in Tenant's Rooms and Can't Get Eatables.

As the aftermath to a wake over the body of the father of Douglass McCotter, Jr., of 527 Jersey avenue, Elizabeth, held in two rooms of a house which he had leased to Mrs. Louis M. Briggs, papers in counter actions are being prepared by lawyers. McCotter owns the house at 140 West Jersey street, but leased it to Mrs. Briggs. Last Saturday he had the body of his father, who died in Staten Island, taken to the house and in two of the rooms held a wake without permission, it is claimed.

After the funeral was over he continued to occupy the rooms, despite the remonstrances of the tenant, Nugent David, who were engaged as counsel by Mrs. Briggs, placed Special Policeman Thomas Carey on duty to look after her interests. McCotter could not be induced to leave the house and it was determined to starve him out, so all day yesterday attempts to take food into the house were frustrated.

Clarence D. Meyer, McCotter's lawyer, last night, attempted to get into the house with some coffee and hot buns for his client. A struggle ensued, when Meyer broke into the screen door on being refused admittance by Carey, and the coffee and rolls were used as missiles. It is said that Mrs. Briggs took a prominent part in the fight and scalded the attorney with the coffee in resisting his entrance.

FAKE AGENT IS ARRESTED

Frank Adams Tried to Get Money from Samuel Rushmore.

EXPOSED BY DRUMMER

Says He Was Too Drunk to Know What He Was Doing—Has Fit In His Cell.

Accused of trying to get money under false pretenses, a man who describes himself as Frank Adams, of New York, was arrested on Park avenue, last night, by Chief of Police Kiely. The complaint on which the arrest was made was sworn out by Samuel Rushmore, head of the Rushmore Dynamo Works, South avenue.

Adams, it is alleged, went to Mr. Rushmore, at the latter's office yesterday afternoon, and represented himself as the purchasing agent of the Cramp shipyard, Philadelphia. He gave his name as Frank Adams. He ordered six searchlights, and in the conversation that followed he showed apparent familiarity with the Cramps' plant. He referred to the fact that Mr. Rushmore had not received orders from the Cramps for two years, and said, it is alleged, that the business had been withheld because he and Charles Dougherty, described as the electrical engineer of the shipyard, hadn't been "seen."

Mr. Rushmore and the supposed agent went downtown a little later. They stopped at the Iroquois Hotel, at the suggestion of Adams, who wanted a drink. Charles F. Roy, a travelling salesman who is staying at the Iroquois, caught sight of Mr. Rushmore's companion, and evinced interest in him. He called Mr. Rushmore aside and gave him the information that led to the arrest.

Adams, Mr. Roy said, called at his office in New York the afternoon before, and representing himself as Charles Earl, of the mechanical department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, ordered floor sweepers. He signed the name Johnson to the order, and Mr. Roy asked what that meant. Instead of explaining, Adams hurried away.

The arrest followed speedily on Mr. Roy's information. Adams' game, it is said, was to secure an advance on the commission usually allowed agents in making purchases. Mr. Rushmore, it is alleged, was asked for an advance by Adams.

In the city court this morning, arraigned before Judge Runyon, sitting as a State magistrate, Adams pleaded drunkenness as an excuse for his acts. He said he had been drinking, and didn't know why he came to Plainfield or what he had been doing here. He gave signs of having drunk too much, and after he returned to his cell he was seized with a fit. He came out of it after a bit.

Judge Runyon remanded him for further investigation. Chief Kiely will communicate with the Cramps today, and learn if the man has had any connection with them.

FORT LOSES IN HIS HOME TOWN.

Sommer Gets Seventeen Delegates There to Rivals Seven.

East Orange, Sept. 12.—It was 5 o'clock yesterday morning before there was any idea as to the exact primary returns in East Orange, the home of Supreme Court Justice John Franklin Fort. The primary resulted in a blow to the jurist's candidacy in that in his home city he had only seven delegates, while Sheriff Frank Sommer received seventeen.

The Fort supporters had tickets up in every district, and the contest for delegates to the county convention was abandoned by them in order to secure strength for the judge. The Colbyites made several gains in the Republican county committee also. One of the greatest fights was in the Second Ward, where Charles B. Yardley, Jr., a reformer, defeated Frederic A. Reimer, and George A. Austin won over Robert H. Crater, the latter a regular.

CHAIRMAN HUDSPETH AGREES WITH MARTINE

HOPES PLAINFIELDER'S IDEAS WILL BE IN PARTY PLATFORM.

State Chairman Robert S. Hudspeth, of Hudson county, today sent a letter today to "Farmer-orator" James E. Martine, Union county's choice for the gubernatorial nomination, thanking him for his suggestions for the party platform and assuring him that the chairman, himself, would like to see them incorporated among the planks to be framed.

Mr. Martine in response to a letter from the State Chairman declared that he favored unequivocal declarations in favor of limited franchises, franchise tax; a public utilities commission elected by the people; popular election of United States Senators; an economical administration of the State's affairs and a thorough house-cleaning.

This is the reply of Chairman Hudspeth:

"Hon. James E. Martine,
"Cedar Brook Farm,
"Plainfield, N. J.

"My dear Mr. Martine:

"Your favor of the 7th at hand. I am in hearty accord with you in relation to your suggestions as to Democratic State platform. I trust the greater portion of the planks you refer to will be adopted.

"I agree with you that a thorough house-cleaning is essential in the interests of good government. I hope our party may be successful in using the "broom." I shall look to you for aid and co-operation in the coming contest. We shall open headquarters shortly, and trust to see you frequently.

"Believe me,
"Very sincerely yours,
"R. S. HUDSPETH."

FAMOUS HYMN WRITER A PLAINFIELD VISITOR

REV. E. S. UFFORD AUTHOR OF "THROW OUT THE LIFE LINE" IS HERE.

Church-going people, who have sung the popular Gospel hymn, "Throw Out the Life-Line," would, no doubt, appreciate an opportunity of meeting the writer, hear him sing the hymn and relate how he was led to compose the song. The author is Rev. E. S. Ufford, a New England minister, who was born in Newark in 1851. He spent many years near the Long Island Sound, and tells how his love for the sea wrought upon a naturally poetic temperament and paved the way for the song, which pictures the tragedy of the storm-swept coast.

Mr. Ufford last year addressed audiences in Newark on his way home from his work among the churches. He arrived here yesterday, and will remain over Sunday, possibly giving one or more of his sermons on the unique subjects from which he presents the gospel in story and song. He came to Plainfield from the bedside of Ira D. Sankey, in Brooklyn, to whom he is greatly indebted for making his life-line hymn so popular. With Mr. Moody, it was used effectively during their campaigns in this and other countries.

Foreclosed Mortgages.

William Claasen's shadowy ownership of the barber shop on Park avenue passed away this morning. The two mortgages on the xtures held by William Young, who conducted the cigar stand in the shop, were foreclosed, and Young bought the fixtures in. He will conduct the business. Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., is Mr. Young's lawyer. No trace of the missing Claasen has been found.

paign to corral delegates and it is believed that he will be a formidable factor for the place when the convention is called to order at Somerville.

Charles Parkhurst Sebring has been one of the foremost Republican workers in Somerset county for many years and a good deal of credit is due him for his work at succeeding elections. He is a native of North Plainfield township, having been born at Greenbrook, the family homestead when that section was a part of the township which is now divided into Warren township, North Plainfield township and North Plainfield borough. His father, William H. Sebring, was elected by the Republicsan as tax collector when that district was solidly Democratic. For a time Mr.Sebring lived in North Plainfield borough, and during his residence there served as a councilman under the administrations of Mayors Place and Saunders. He was chairman of the North Plainfield township committee for since years, declaring to serve longer. Three years ago he was pitted against Sheriff E. E. Cooper, of Warren township, for the office he now seeks but withdrew in the latter's favor on convention day.

Mr. Sebring is a thorough business man and is held in high esteem throughout Somerset county as well as in Plainfield where he is active as a builder.

The girl is accused of having stolen a stickpin and silver to the value of $100.

The police have had her under surveillance since a day or two after the robbery. She was arrested yesterday and confessed. She entered the house through a window.

Arthur Peck performed the ceremony in the dining room of the house beneath a floral bell of clematis. The bay window was decorated with clematis and palms. The bride was gowned in white silk crepe de chine and carried a show boquet of asters. The maid of honor, Miss Clara Gullberg, a sister of the bride, was gowned in pink silk mulle and carried pink asters. The best man was edward Burns, a brother of the groom.

The groom is employed by the Jersey Central at Jersey City. The guests waited at the North avenue station to bid the couple good-bye, but they took the train at the Netherwood station. The presents consisted of a $100 check, a piano and silverware. After their return from a trip to Niagara Falls the couple will reside at 710 South avenue, where the groom has furnished a home.

The reports showed the membership of the local union to be 208, a slight increase over last year. The finances were stated to be in excellent condition. The reports of the various superintendents of departments indicated progress and increased interest, with a spread of temperance sentiment.

The annual address of Mrs. Tomlinson gave an interesting and comprehensive review of the temperance work, not only locally, but throughout the State and nation. Reference was made with considerable pride to the decided advance of temperance principles in the Southern States, where local option now prevails, and it was urged that the members do all in their power to secure the adoption of such a measure in this State.

A feature of the afternoon was an address by Miss Kierans, of Elizabeth, superintendent of prison and jail work. She told of the vast amount of good accomplished by her department among the prisoners detained at the county jail. Her remarks were filled with interesting facts.

Announcement was made of the twenty-third annual convention of the Union County W. C. T. U., to be held in the Presbyterian church, Dunellen, Tuesday, September 24, and as many as possible was urged to attend. During the noon hour the members partook of a basket lunch.

REPUBLICANS NAME TICKET

Kirstein, Moxon and Pierce are Nominated for Assembly and Parrot for Surrogate.

PLATFORM IS BRIEF

Benjamin King Makes Poor Showing in Surrogateship as Does Randolph Perkins for the Assembly.

REPUBLICAN TICKET

For Surrogate

GEORGE T. PARROT, of Elizabeth.

For Assembly

JOHN R. MOXON,
of Elizabeth.
CARLTON B. PIERCE, of Cranford.
A. F. KIRSTEIN, of Rahway.

Such will be the Republican ticket in Union county if the plans mapped out do not miscarry at the county convention being held at Turn Hall, Elizabeth, this afternoon. The delegates were called to order promptly at 3 o'clock by County Chairman Frank H. Smith, of this city. After the call for the convention was read, former City Judge William R. Coddington made a brief speech, the convention got down to work. Announcement was made of the various convention committees, including those on contests, resolutions and the like. And then a brief recess was taken as is the custom. Following the recess, candidates for surrogate and assembly were put in nomination.

The Plainfield delegation headed by Robert H. McCready, a New Idea member of the county committee, occupied seats well in front of the hall. The delegation included:

C. G. Little, A. F. Raymond, H. C. Van Emburg, Amos Andrews, Casper Stadele, L. R. Hopton, Arthur Lovell, C. B. Morse, P. S. Suffern, John Bicknell, R. H. McCready, J. W. Murray, Jr., S. C. Baker, N. The county executive committee had held a meeting at 2 o'clock and the real work of the convention was planned at that time. Brief resolutions prepared beforehand were read and met with general approval. The lists of committees was also made up.

Assembly Randolph Perkins, the floor leader of the House, who is making a vain fight for a fourth nomination, was on the scene early today marshalling the handful of delegates which he had obtained at the primaries of Tuesday. All told, there were about twenty-four of them, Perkins did his best to get others to come under his banner but met with no success. Carlton B. Pierce, of Cranford, who takes his place on the ticket, mingled among the crowd and was introduced to many of the old time leaders. He made a good impression.

A. B. Kirstein, of Rahway, who is Rahway's choice for Assemblyman Peter Tillman's place on the ticket, was also conspicuous. He is a druggist and has not figured much in county politics but it is said to be strong in his home town. Assemblyman John R. Moxon, of Elizabeth, who will be given a renomination, also minled with the crowd.

The surrogateship was the major topic during the morning. Benjamin King, of Clark township, who is serving his third year as director of the Union County Board of Freeholders, put up a fight for delegates in his effort to wrest the nomination from the present incumbent, George T. Parrot, whi is supported generally by the organization. There was no

Plainfield in the Olden Days...

Re-printed from The Constitutionalist

(From the Constitutionalist, June, 1874.)

On Saturday last we had the pleasure of witnessing one of the finest played amateur games of the season, the game for the championship of the city, between the Y. M. C. A. and the Plainfield Athletic Club. But, alas for the championship, it still remains to be decided, for after a closely contested [illegible] of ten innings [illegible] to all called at 5.15 P. [illegible] with the Athletics at the bat, who after batting in two runs were quietly retired. The Y. M. C. A. then grasped the willow and batted for naught (0) and received it, in one, two, three order.

At the close of the third inning the score stood 4 to 3 in favor of the Y. M. C. A. In the fourth inning the Athletics added 1 to their score and the Y. M. C. A. 8. In the fifth inning the Athletics surprised every one by batting for twelve runs [illegible] 4 in the sixth, five. In the three [illegible] sequent innings the Athletics [illegible] blanks, while the Y. M. C. The captains of the contesting nines then held a consultation and agreed, with the permission of the umpire, to call the game a draw, as it was growing dark. Thus ending a hotly contested and altogether exciting game, in which the spectators, ladies as well as gentlemen, appeared to be as deeply interested as the players. The following is the score:

One of our clients owed $48 between four people. His salary is $14 weekly; rent $12 monthly. To have paid $2 weekly to each creditor, combined with rent, would have left only $3 per week to meet expenses, buy clothing, etc.—an impossibility you will agree. He borrowed $50, paid all his creditors, made his future credit good, if ever needed; pays his rent, the loan payments, and has $9 each week to use as his judgment dictates.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

There will be no advance in prices for the production here of "The Lion and the Mouse," Charles Klein's greatest play, which Henry B. Harris will produce at the New Plainfield Monday, September 16. Gertrude Coghland and Edmund Breese will be seen in the leading roles.

In the De Koven, Klein and Cook opera, "Red Feather," which comes to the New Plainfield Saturday afternoon and night, the theatregoers of this city will find that in both book and music the attraction is superior to recent musical offerings. In composing the score, Reginald De Koven reverted to his "Robin Hood" style, which so endeared him to the cultured musicians of this generation, and they are competent judges, who afforded the opportunity of comparing the two, have discovered passages in the "Red Feather" that excel the value the best efforts of the composer's first notable achievement.

The announcement that "Not Yet, But Soon," which Hap Ward and his muiscal farce company will present here tonight, belong to the same class of fun that first made Ward and Vokes famous, will give a pretty fair idea of the kind of show to be expected. It is a musical farce comedy, two acts in length, iwth its action placed at a sanitarium called "Bughouse on the Hudson."

In "Caught in the Rain," which will be produced here Friday night, William Collier played to the greatest business that the Garrick theatre in New York has ever been done for seven months last season. His audiences taxed the capacity of the theatre, and for many weeks there was not a vacant seat or a waste inch of standing room at any one of his performances.

Adelaide Thurston will use her last season's success again this season. It is a comedy drama in four acts, by Pauline Phelps and Marion Short, called "The Girl From Way Out Yonder." It will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre on Tuesday, September 17. The scenes are laid along the coast of Maine; the first showing the veranda of a country club house at Terry's Harbor, and the other three on an island a few miles off the coast, one showing a wreck and the others the interior of a lighthouse.

LITERARY

A complete novelette, "The Mind-Reader," by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, leads the September Century, a tale rich in that notable author's characteristic insight into character, and with an unusual plot holding interest to an entirely unexpected conclusion. The serials, Frances Hodgson Burnett's "The Shuttle" and Elizabeth Robins' "Come and Find Me," develop with intensifying interest; and there are short stories also by Dorothea Deakin, Charlotte Wilson, Edward J. Nocton, Beatrice Danscom and Margaret Horner Clyde. A popular feature of the September Century is a freshly interesting presentation of "Racing In Its Relation to Horse-Breeding," by John Gilmer Speed, author of "The Horse in America," who takes the ground that while racing is essential to the preservation of the thoroughbred, gambling is the curse of racing.

The Christian Endeavor Society, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, has resumed its meetings for the fall and winter, the sessions being held on Friday nights.

George F. Brown, of Somerset street, deals in first-class real estate and also sells the best fire and accident insurance. Consult him if you need anything in this line.

The Epworth League, of the First M. E. church, has resumed its meetings for the fall and winter. The social committee is now busy planning several entertainments for the season.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society, of Trinity Reformed church, held its first meeting for the fall and winter season on Monday afternoon. There was a good attendance of members, and the work of the society was taken up earnestly by the members and officers. Two new members were received.

The Men's Club of Grace M. E. Church has elected these officers for the coming year: President, W. A. Cochran; vice president, Dr. R. S. Stevens; secretary, J. L. Bennett; treasurer, Andrew Lutkins; board of directors, George Bird, W. E. Bartell, Rev. Miller, H. F. Woolston, A. H. Wilson, Frank Neidig. The entertainment committee is planning to give a banquet in the near future. Arrangements are also being made for a series of entertainments during the fall and winter. Any male person over 16 years of age is elegible for membership.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

DIAMOND DUST.

Outside of the Inter-City Amateur League teams, it is believed that the Highlanders have the best all-round aggregation, having won eleven and lost two games this season. The West End team, which is also anxious to claim that honor, had the luck of winning one of the two games lost by the score of 6 to 5. Both teams had an open date Saturday, but the West Ends declined the overtures of the management of the Highlanders for a game. The Highlanders insist that they must be reckoned with before the West Ends can claim the city championship.

The Giants have lost their one opportunity to finish in second place, and the chances are that third position will be their best when the season closes.

Mathewson's record this season shows that he has pitched about twenty-eight games and won a majority of them. He would have done far better had the team behind him fielded up to its average. McGraw must make several changes before next season if he wants to retain the prestige of his team. A new first baseman and another shortstop are badly needed.

The Reading club, of the Atlantic League, has won the pennant in that league this season. Experience has shown that the Pennsylvania teams in the league were the best drawing cards, while those in New Jersey and New York were only fair.

It appears doubtful whether the Atlantic League will be represented in Elizabeth next season. It is reported that the club has lost considerable money there, and that even the Sunday games have not offset the loss from the week-day games.

With Prof. Benjamin Phelps in charge of the athletics at the North Plainfield High School greater things will be expected from the boys than heretofore. He will make evry effort to raise the standard of athletics in the school and develope good baseball and football teams.

There was great rejoicing in the Hoboken camp this week when Manager Daab's team defeated Jersey City by a score of 4 to 0. The rivalry between these teams is intense. It is the opinion that the Hobokens are as strong as any minor league club, and they are playing an especially fast game at present.

Mike Donlin is assurred for an outfield position with the Giants next season, and he should be of great help in the hitting line, something that has been missed this year.

Johnny Kane, a youngster, has been secured as an outfielder for the Giants. He has apparently made good, and may be used regularly.

Neuer, the pitcher from the Southern League signed by the Highlanders, is doing good work. He has won every game pitched for Griffith's team.

Interesting facts concerning a couple of Eastern League twirlers. Brockett came from Buffalo to the New York Americans and is now back in the Eastern with Montreal. Mason went from Baltimore to Cincinnati, thence to the New York Americans and is now finishing out the season with Jersey City.

Doc White, it is said, has written an article on the decline of college baseball. It has generally been admitted that college baseball was better this season than during any previous year.

Heyniger, the Princeton star twirler, will have a fine opportunity to shine next season. He will be given first place in all the big games, and there is no doubt but that he will make good.

Speaking of a possible post-season series with a National League team, Manager Lajoie, of the Clevelands, says: "Not for my men. If we cannot win the pennant I, for one, do not care to take part in a series that does not mean anything." And there's a good deal of sense in that. Outside of the championship series there is not such a wild, overpowering craving for inter-league games as has been made out.

A St. Louis physician, recently returned fromr England, comments on the poor throwing of the cricketers. What would be ordinary throw to the plate by a baseball outfielder is relayed three times by the Englishmen.

GOLF.

Lynn Johnson, formerly of Ridgewood, N. J., has won the Minnesota State championship. In the final round at the Town and Country Club recently Johnson defeated Harry Legg, the Lawrenceville student, who won the Eastern interscholastic championship at Garden City in the spring. Johnson defeated Legg by 1 up in a thirty-six-hole match.

It is not unlikely that the next fall open tournament of the Lakewood Country Club will be held during Thanksgiving week, as had been the custom prior to last year. The only reason the club's officials changed the time was through fear of bad weather. There is, however, a strong sentiment in favor of a return to the original date.

An invitation tournament will be held by the Morris County Golf Club on September 19, 20 and 21, a week earlier than the dates first announced. Two players will be asked from each club in the eMtropolitan Golf Association, and, besides others to be specially invited, all present and past winners and runners-up in the United States, eMtropolitan, New Jersey and intercollegiate championships will be asked. Acceptances have been received from J. D. Travers, W. J. Travis, E. M. Byers, H. J. Whigham, C. B. Macdonald, Findlay Douglas and Archie Graham thus far. With the home contingent, the club expects from sixty to eighty starters.

An eighteen-hole medal play round will open the tournament, a cup being awarded to the maker of the low score. There will be a cup at match play for three sets of sixteen, and a cup for each beaten eight. All the final rounds will be at thirty-six holes. An eighteen-hole handicap, for best gross and net score cups, will be an extra feature of the last day.

There is a chance for some golfer, either amateur or professional, to make a record over the rearranged course of the Crescent Athletic Club. Until a few days ago the organization at Bay Ridge was able to boast of an eighteen-hole circuit, but the cutting through of streets at last made it necessary to abandon part of the land, especially as the full course as it has been this season was regarded as by far too short.

Frank O. Reinhart and "Marty" O'Loughlin will go to Inwood, L. I., Sunday to play a match with Ed Erickson and the best amateur of that club.

The play for the Autumn cups at the Plainfield Country Club promises to be one of the most popular competitions of the season. Each Saturday two players must qualify for match play during October. The competition is arranged for Class A and B.

Charles B. Morse is playing in improved form this year, which is attested by the fact that he now leads for the President's and Golf Club cups with a substantial number of points for each.

Although he concedes the Van Cortlandt course to be in better condition now than last year. Arthur Pottow has this to say on public links in Golf: "Now that it has been demonstrated that the best golfers, both amateur and professional, are very willing to play on a public course, an inducement is offered to park departments everywhere to see that public courses are kept in a condition that will not compare unfavorably with those of private clubs. From a business point of view there is something utterly foolish in having a course in bad condition. Compared to the value of the land and the original cost of the course, what does the difference between a bad and good unkeep amount to? Besides, it is not fair to a class of citizens who are as much entitled to consideration as any other. Speaking of New York in particular, the city has spent several millions in constructing a speedway for a small and select class. What a howl there would be from these people if the speedway was allowed to become unfit to drive over. Yet the same city authorities will view with indifference a golf course with rough putting greens and a fair green riddled with cuppy lies. The city authorities are entirely wrong."

Acceptances have already been received from Jerome D. Travers, of Montclair, the present title holder in all three classes; Walter J. Travis, of Garden City, a three times national winner; Eben M. Byers, of Allegheny; Findlay S. Douglas, of Nassau; Charles B. Macdonald, of Garden City; Archie Graham, of North Jersey, and H. J. Whigham.

Conditions call for an eighteen-hole medal play qualifying round, contestants to qualify in three sixteens. There are also cups for the beaten eights in these divisions. The course is in excellent condition at present.

Considerable interested is being manifested in a four-ball professional match, to be held at Bernardsville on Saturday. The men engaged are Aleo Smith, of Nassau; George Low, of Baltusrol; Jack Hobens, of Englewood, and Joseph Hagen, of Bernardsville. It is expected that Low and Hobens will be partners.

George Turnbull, the professional at the Highland Golf Club, of Jamaica, has been going well of late, and recently succeeded in equalling the record for the course of 36, held for so long by Dr. Cleveland, the crack amateur of the club. Turnbull's round was as follows: 4 4 4 4 4 3 5 4 4—36. The course is about 2,900 yards long.

The next competitive attraction of importance in this vicinity will be the annual invitation tournament of the Morris County Golf Club, to be held on September 19, 20 and 21. As an innovation the club has especially invited all those who have been champions or runners-up in the national, Metropolitan or New Jersey championship tournaments.

George Strath, the club's professional, has utilized the available ground by laying out a long nine-hole course, covering a playing length of 3,180 yards. This was played over for the first time on Saturday, and there was also quite a crowd out on Sunday. The best score returned was a 91. According to Strath, the members will find that they have at last got a golf course. All the one-shot holes have disappeared, as may be seen by the following distances: 260, 483, 473, 401, 347, 356, 352, 252, 256; total, 3,180.

The old eighteen-hole course as it stood this season measured only about 4,700 yards, quite a difference from the new arrangement, which means nearly 6,400 yards for the double round. T. H. Hovenden held the competitive record of 69 over the old links, while James Rhett has been credited with a 68 at match play.

Golf at the Crescent Athletic Club was never so popular as it has been this season. Out of the total membership, which is now 2,500, fully 700 make use of the links.

WAITING FOR BRICK.

Contractor Can't Go Ahead With Pave Work.

As soon as Contractor C. M. Meeker receives a sufficient number of vitrified brick from the Pennsylvania Clay Company to complete Park avenue, between Front and Fourth streets, he will start the work. He has thus far received about half the number for this thoroughfare, there being twenty-two carloads of brick delayed on the railroad somewhere between the company's plant and Plainfield.

Tracers have been sent out for the cars, and it is believed that they will reach Plainfield within a few days. Mr. Meeker says that he has everything in readiness to begin operations upon the rival of the brick.

James Smith, of Elmwood place, is visiting friends at Poughkeepsie.

SILKS of Quality Most Moderately Priced.

If there is one thing more notable about our Silk Stock than another it is the fact that prices, even on the most exclusive things we show, are moderate. You pay nothing here for name or reputation. The finest silks are sold as any other merchandise. We ask only a modest profit.

This season's showing of silks is simply superb, running from the most popular of the staple things to the richest silks seen in Newark.

Many of the prettiest things we show are confined to this house alone and cannot be had elsewhere in Newark at any price. Those who want to be in touch with the very newest things as well as the highest grades, will naturally come here.

Instances of what we can do in a price way will be found in the five items we feature for Tuesday:

36-inch Black Taffeta—fine dress quality; medium weight; perfect jet black; a $1.25 quality for $1.10

26-inch Black Peau de Soie—all silk; good weight; jet black; nice for gowns or coats; good $1.25 quality for 1.15

23-inch Black Peau de Soie; strictly all silk, same weight and jet black as the 26-in. width; nice for dresses and waists; $1.15 quality for $1.00

Fancy Plaid Louisine and Taffetas—domestic and imported weaves, embracing a full line of the popular clans and many fancies for waists and dresses; exceptional quality, at the little price of .. .75

Striped and Checked Louisines and Taffetas—blue, brown, gray and black; checks of all sizes, suitable for suits or waists; a good 69c quality for only ..... .59

NEW DRESS STUFFS.

Our Great Dress Goods Section is crowded from end to end with new and beautiful fabrics in a variety of patterns and colorings that is most bewildering. Bginning at the door and running along the entire New Street Aisle are counters and shelves stocked almost to their limit with staple and unusual weaves—many of them confined strictly to this house in Newark—more imported fabrics than will be found in all other Newark stores combined; more high-grade stuffs than will be found in all other Newark stores; a choice so wide, so satisfactory, that really there is nothing left one but to come here for such dress stuffs as they desire.

Why fritter away your time going from place to place looking at meager stocks when here you are assured of practically everything good that is in the market and many things that can be had nowhere else—all at prices notably low and fair.

Broadcloths are particularly strong this season, and naturally they are here in extraordinary variety—in subdued colorings, in plain and in fancy stripes and checks including many very pretty herring-bone and hair-line stripes from the world's best looms.

Imported Broadcloths, $2.75 and $3.50. Spot-Proof Broadcloths, $2.25 and $3.50.

Domestic Broadcloths, $1 up to $2.25.

Panamas in a vast array of plain shades much in favor this season—always desirable—are here at prices ranging from 75c to $1.50.

All Wool Fancy Panamas in rich and charming colorings—combinations that are most effective; for instance, green and garnet, green and wine, green and blue, green and red, and green and brown may be had at the moderate price of $1.

Shadow Striped Prunellas in many pretty shades are here at 1.25.

Charming Voiles in pretty plain shades and dainty shadow effects are here at $1 to $1.50.

All Wool Taffetas in a great variety at $1 to $1.25.

Plaids—Particularly nice for children's dresses—here in all the popular clans; some particularly pretty imported ones, deep and rich in colorings, at almost any price you wish to pay.

Black Stuffs in the usual variety—all the staple things and many rich novelties.

SCHOOL CLOTHES for Particular Boys.

With the opening of school the boys' real need of clothes becomes apparent. From the care-free vacation day life to the golden rule school life is quite a step. The boy could make almost anything do thru the summer, but now he must look fairly well dressed if he wants to travel in the same class with the average prosperous American lad.

Don't be alarmed at the growing pride in school boys. They never were so well dressed as now, and the improvement in dress has been caused as much by the demands of the boy whose growing taste requires the nicer things as by anything else.

The school clothes we provide are of the sort that satisfies the youngster who desires to be well dressed, be he little lad or one closely approaching manhood.

Knee Pant Suits are here in tremendous variety with straight, bloomer or knickerbocker trousers.

Young Men's Suits in handsome new brown mixtures—tan and green effects, and blue cheviots and serge are here aplenty.

All the new models in Double and Single Breasted styles with and without yoke, and Double Breasted with or without belts; knickerbocker or straight trousers, and Norfolk and knickerbockers, at from $1.98 to ..... .14

Suits with extra trousers at $4.50, $5 and $6.98.

Separate Straight, Bloomer and Knickerbocker Trousers at almost any price you wish to pay.

Long Pants Suits in all the newest colorings and styles at prices fully 20 per cent. less than you will be asked to pay elsewhere.

Plainfield, N. J., September 12, 1907.

Fowler for Governor? Wouldn't that tickle the Union County Democrats?

Those who have sought in vain to stir up strife in the Republican party will now shout "Hurrah for us Republicans." Just watch 'em.

A hearty welcome awaits our efficient State Senator who arrives on the Lusitania tomorrow after fulfilling a mission abroad for the people New Jersey.

Now that it has done its worst and has been repudiated in its feeble effort to disrupt the Republican party, the sheet around the corner will sing the chants of the regulars for the rest of the campaign.

Hats off to County Chairman Frank H. Smith, under whose masterly leadership the regulars won so signal a victory not only in Plainfield but throughout Union county. As the Elizabeth Journal very rightly says his victory at home "shows that he has the confidence of the people in his particular section, as he has of the rank and file of the party elsewhere in the county." To which we add that his victory throughout the county stamps him as an able leader of the Republican hosts.

Had Mr. Perkins favorably considered our friendly suggestion that inasmuch as he was doomed to a crushing defeat it would be better for him to stifle his ambitions by withdrawing from the Assembly race, he would not have been such a pitiable figure at the county convention today. As we stated long ago, Mr. Perkins had no show of winning and his continued candidacy in defiance of public sentiment only served to prevent perfect harmony from prevailing at the meeting of the delegates chosen to name his successor.

Although the people of New Jersey will never become so narrow-minded as some of the citizens of the Swiss Republic, reckless automobilists may profit by a recent occurrence in that foreign land. So strong is the opposition to the horseless vehicle in Switzerland that recently, according to the Paris Herald. "The Swiss Federal Council refused to allow a man named Mr. Hugo Bremer to pass through the Engadine with his automobile exception on condition he stopped the motor and had his machine drawn by horses. Mr. Bremer accepted the conditions." As State Senator Frelinghuysen, the father of New Jersey's auto regulation law, said a short time ago, if the reckless drivers persist in their defiance of the laws, it would not be a strange thing to see an issue made in favor of prohibiting automobilists the use of the State's highways.

P. H. S. Notes.

Miss Mildred Parker, of Pottsdam, N. Y., the new teacher in the cooking department of the P. H. S., will meet the pupils of her class tomorrow to plan for the year's work.

Charles Bostwick, of this city, who has been engaged as the manual training teacher at the P. H. S., will also meet his pupils tomorrow. There will be two classes this year, the advance and one comprised of beginners.

The board of editors of the Oracle met today to discuss plans for the year. The Debating Society will meet on Thursday of next week. George Fisher is the new president.

Excursion to the Allentown Fair.

The great Allentown Fair, September 17th to 20th, will be greater than ever this year. The New Jersey Central has made special rates for tickets to the Fair, and on Sept. 19th will run a special train from Plainfield at 7.46 a. m. Round trip tickets, $1.50. 9-11-4

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

Martine Not Afraid.

Union county's old Democratic war horse, James E. Martine, is said to be out of the race for his party's nomination for Governor, but, if this is so, it is not at all to the credit of the party. There is this to be said about Martine—he knows what he stands for, and is not afraid to voice his convictions in advance of the primaries. That is more than can be said of any other Democratic candidate, and of any Republican candidate, with the exception of Sommer. Martine would stand, if nominated and elected, "for equal taxation, in fact as well as in name; for the election of United States Senators by the people; for limited franchises; for the taxation of public utility franchises; for a public utilities commission, elected by the people; for the abolition of voting machines; for an honest and economical administration and a thorough housecleaning." Some of these planks are not approved by all Democrats. For instance, there is a wide divergence of views as to voting machines, but the "Farmer Orator" is no coward. He has convictions on this subject, as well as on others of equal or more importance, and he is not afraid to express them. Perhaps, the most popular of his demands is for a "thorough house-cleaning." By this he means a house-cleaning at the State House, and not in Plainfield, where the government is said to be fairly satisfactory.

Thus far, the State has waited with baited breath to hear what Fort, Pitney, Collins, Child and Katzenbach have to say about house-cleanings and other subjects in the public minds. Young Katzenbach, in answer to questions, tells funny stories, and Child, Fort, Pitney and Collins are unprepared to take the public into their confidence at this time. Yet, today the people are electing the delegates who will make the nominations. After tonight at 9 o'clock, the power, in both conventions, will have been passed along to the politicians, and it will be too late to recall it. When the matter is viewed in its right light, it must be apparent to everybody that the system is wrong. Every candidate for a public office should be compelled to declare himself before the primaries, as Martine has done, and as Sommer has done. Silence gives the selfish interests all of the advantage. The correct method of nominating candidates for office is the direct primary system of the Southern States. Forunately, this year the contest is so uncertain, and the result is likely to be so close, that it will be possible to compel the candidates to perform their delayed duty, and express themselves in much the same uncertain language that Martine has used. That nominee who is most frank with the public, whose present company is best and whose past alliances are most commendable, is likely to get the bulk of the independent vote, which will decide the Gubernatorial election.—Hudson Observer.

Charles Newell Fowler.

Congressman Charles Newell Fowler, the lawyer-banker, who has represented the Fifth New Jersey District, was elected for his seventh term in Congress last year, but by a very narrow shave. His opponent, Farmer Orator Martine, ran behind him only 552 votes. Martine defeated him in his own county of Union by 110 plurality. Fowler's plurality in Morris saved him. In 1904 Fowler carried the district by 5,234 and his plurality in Union was 2,562. When the Republican State leaders last winter were looking around for a candidate for Governor they consulted the election figures, and decided that Charles Newell Fowler need not be considered. Nor has he been considered in his own county, where he will not have a single delegate.—Newark Morning Star.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Hecter Claisse.

Mrs. Clara H. Claisse, wife of Hecter Claisse, and sister of Mrs. Hippolyte Texier, of Watchung, died this morning at her home, 119 Summit avenue, following a long illness. She was formerly a resident of New York, moving to the borough a short time ago. She is survived by a husband and a son and daughter, Miss Mariam Claisse and Adrian Claisse. The funeral services will be held from the late residence Saturday morning at 9 o'clock and from St. Joseph's church at 9:30 o'clock. The burial will be in Calvary Cemetery, Brooklyn.

Charles Armstrong.

The funeral service of Charles Armstrong, brother of T. S. Armstrong, of Duer street, was held yesterday afternoon from the late home in Camden. Rev. Mr. Lyle, pastor of the First Baptist church, of that place, and Rev. Mr. Peck, another Baptist minister, were in charge. The burial was in Camden. Mr. Armstrong was the oldest of several sons. He had been in failing health for years and two weeks ago he went to Brattleboro, Vt., in the hope that the change would be beneficial. It was not, and he passed away early Sunday morning. Mr. Armstrong, of this city, and other brother went to Brattleboro and took the remains to Camden. Charles Armstrong was well known here, where he frequently visited and resided at one time.

excitement over the coronership. No one seemed to want the job.

King had less than a dozen delegates and Perkins had about twice as many.

Twenty-five of the twenty-seven local delegates elected to the Republican county convention held a conference at the Casino last night. County Chairman F. H. Smith was chosen chairman of the meeting, and John W. Murray, Jr., secretary. Robb H. McCready was decided upon as the chairman of the Plainfield delegation to the county convention.

An informal ballot was taken to ascertain how the delegates stood on the Assembly-fight, and it was learned that of the twenty-five present, nineteen were for C. B. Pierce for the Assembly nomination to succeed Randolph Perkins, and five were for Perkins. S. C. Baker did not vote. Robert H. McCready, John Bicknell and Dr. N. H. Currie, three of the five Perkins delegates, asked if they would be permitted to vote for some one else besides his. They were informed that they could vote for whom they pleased.

It was believed by the delegates that Perkins would not receive more than twenty-three or twenty-four votes in the county for a renomination. That was the opinion expressed by County Chairman F. H. Smith.

JUST KICKED AT A CAT.

Cure for Rheumatism Discovered by a Jersey Freight Clerk.

A clerk in a railroad freight office in Jersey City suffered from spasmodic twinges in his right leg, which he attributed to rheumatism. He consulted a physician and spent a good deal for medicine, but continued to grow worse. One morning recently the office tomcat in a spirit of friendliness arched his back and rubbed against the afflicted calf. The clerk gave a vicious kick with his bad leg and a gray streak shot through the air. He hobbled to a chair and sat down with a few stirring remarks about cats and rheumatism. A few minutes later he gritted his teeth hard and arose. He shook his leg and feebly smiled. Then he walked like a drum major across the floor and boisterously shook hands with himself. The sharp twinges had disappeared and there has been no recurrence of pain. The clerk's doctor corrected his diagnosis when asked for an explanation of the sudden cure and said that what he mistook for rheumatism was probably caused by a twisted ligament. The kick at the cat straightened out the twist and removed the cause of the trouble.

HAVE TO FIGHT PREJUDICE.

Salvation Army Unpopular Among Certain English Classes.

A woman on discovering that she had become sober while in the care of the Salvation army held up her hands in horror, shrieking, "Take me away from here quick, or I'll lose my reputation.'" This story was told by Gen. Booth. "It's a true story, and illustrates how absurd is some of the antipathy which exists against us," said Gen. Booth. "Some people whose prejudice we have to overcome look upon drunkenness as no stain upon their character, but think their reputations are besmirched if they attend a Salvation army meeting. I can tell you another story. An old drunken sot fell into our hands. We looked up his record, and found that he had been drunk so long he didn't remember much about himself. At last we discovered that he had deserted his wife. After much trouble we located his wife, who lived in a distant town; so we sent her this telegram; 'We have found your dear husband.' In a few hours the answer came back: 'You can keep him.'"

Sentiment.

A flag is no more to be classed as a strip of bunting than the sword of Bunker Hill could be classed as a chunk of steel. Memories, traditions, ideals, loyalty, patriotism are not unreal because they cannot be measured with a yardstick or weighed on the scales of a coal yard. Loyalty to the flag is a force as real and far more permanent than the great lifting crane of the navy yard. Patriotism will move more, in the space of time, than the biggest engine in the freight yards. Ideals are more forceful than the biggest mound of radium that the civilized world can ever get together. Public sentiment has had more to do with the digging of the Panama canal than the heaviest shovels driven by steam in the Culebra cut.

Plan Excavations at Memphis.

An appeal is being made in England for funds to undertake the great task of excavating the ruins of Memphis. It is expected that England will now do for Memphis what the French government has done for Delphia and the Germans for Olympia. The sites of the four great temples are plainly marked, so that exploration can begin at once. This mass of ruins covers 100 acres, as much as the whole of the site at Karnak, and it is estimated that $15,000 will be needed annually for fifteen years to accomplish the work. Important material is believed to lie within a few yards of the surface, so that results should be reached promptly.

Useful Candle Nut.

One of the oddest nuts in the world is the candle nut, which grows in the Pacific islands. The name is derived from the fact that the kernel is so full of oil that when dried it can be stuck in a reed and used as a candle. The natives of Hawaii roast these nuts, and after removing the shell reduce the kernel to a paste, which, when seasoned with salt and pepper, is reported as making an appetizing dish. The husk of the nuts and the gum which exudes from the tree have medicinal values, while the burned shell is used in making an indelible ink with which tattooing is done.—American Fruit and Nut Journal.

Victims of Poor Food.

At a recent military enrollment in Baden, Germany, of 604 young men liable to service, only 20 per cent. were found to be up to the physical standard. The peasants of this country were at one time among the most robust in the empire, but owing to the dearness of meat and the fact that the milk which once was a staple article of food is now sold to cheese factories their physique has degenerated.

Not in the Contract.

Husband—"Another new dress! Where do you suppose I shall get the money from to pay for it?" Wife—"You must excuse me. I didn't marry you to give you financial advice."

No Chicken.

Patience—"I saw her in bathing, and it is a fact that she has webfeet." Patrice—"There! I always said she was no chicken!"

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Sept. 15: "Instruction in God's word." "That the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work."—II Tim. iii, 17.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Passages for reference—Deut. iv, 5-10; II Chron. xxxiv, 29-33; Acts xvii, 11, 12; Rom. i, 16; xvi, 25-27.

(Bible Study Day—American Bible Society.)

It is a great work which the American Bible society is doing. Nearly all branches of the Christian church are united in the work of distributing the Bible to all parts of the world. This is in the confident belief that it is God's word and is needed by all men to make them wise unto salvation.

The results of this worldwide circulation of the Scriptures are remarkable. Much of the story is as fascinating as romance. Heroism and even martyrdom has been suffered by those who have done the work. But wherever the book has gone men have turned to God, believing the "glad tidings," even when they have not met any missionary and have had no one to explain the message to them.

The interest of the league in the service this day is double. First there should be intelligent ideas of the duty we have to send the Bible to all men that they may know as fully as we do the will of God. And then we should give attention to the diligent study of the word among ourselves.

Not every one has come to a clear recognition of the duty to send the gospel to all the world. And there are multitudes who think themselves very good Christians who do not have any systematic habits of giving of their means for the extension of the kingdom of God. They have never given any thought to those matters. One of the helpful things the league is doing is in this very direction. It is educating our young people to know that they are under obligation to save every one whom they can reach by personal influence and to reach all they can by their money and prayers. We are becoming more intelligently benevolent. The next generation ought to do more and better work than has ever before been done.

The second part of this duty we are attending to as never before also. We are studying the Bible. We know more about it as literature, and we understand its history more clearly, but that is small in comparison with the fact that we know the Bible itself better. We are coming to its depths of meaning and are feeling the strong influences of its teachings taking fast hold of our daily living and surely, even if slowly, lifting things nearer to God.

Much more than has yet been done remains for us to do in this work. The Sunday school needs strengthening in every department. Then the church itself needs to have deeper and fuller knowledge of the Bible. The great fundamental truths of righteousness need to receive more emphasis until the whole life of the people is quickened by it, until business, politics, family life, society and every part of our complex existence has felt completely the sway of the Spirit of God. There needs to be more aggressiveness in our preaching of the truth. The old prophetic spirit is needed in baptism of pulpit and pew. The league needs to take a firmer hold of all that pertains to the Christ life and, putting all other things under foot, live pure and upright lives everywhere and at all times. We must be Bible Christians. Compare your thinking and doing with the standard, and where you have come short resolve with the help of the Holy Spirit to correct all the past failures and rise to the full height of your privilege in Christ Jesus.

Our Best For God.

To give his very best to God would save many a young man from the worst pitfalls that entrap him. It is because he gives the second best of his love, his strength, his ambition to spiritual things and keeps his best energies for the rest of life that the average Christian is such a weak specimen. As George Meredith expresses it, "The reason so many fall from God is that they cling to Him with their weakness and not with their strength."—Forward.

Beware of This Wile of the Devil.

One way the devil secures the fall of a church is to persuade all the pillars to lie down and become sleepers.—The Bible Reader, Richmond, Va.

Outlook.

I thought I knew the way my feet had trod
Up to the golden threshold of this day;
I thought I knew the guiding of my God
Along the pleasant windings of the way.

But, looking back, I only see the mist
Dropped down the meadows where I sought for Him,
And the low valleys veiled in amethyst,
And the long slopes of shadow growing dim.

He knows if seeking there the road to heaven
I trod the path His love had marked for me;
He knows what help or hindrance I have given
To fellow pilgrims whom I did not see.

He knows what pitfalls I have passed unseen,
What unknown quicksands waited at my side,
What foes lurked near me in the meadows green,
Which now the mist is veiling far and wide.

The valleys lie behind me, and ahead
The far white hill crests lit with sunrise flame.
I cannot tell the heights my feet shall tread;
I cannot trace the lowlands whence I came,

Only one little stretch of road is clear,
Bright in His sunlight, straight through flower and thorn—
The duty that He gives me now and here,
The love and service of this day newborn.

—Mabel Earle in Forward.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 15.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—God's omniscience.—Isa. xl. 12-31.

Omniscience means all wisdom or knowledge, and the omniscience of God simply means that God knows all things.

1. God knows all about the natural universe. He knows, and He only knows, because He alone made it. Scientists for centuries have been trying to solve the great mysteries of the natural world. They have put forth theories which succeed usually in being overthrown by succeeding generations. Only a comparatively few of the doctrines of the universe have stood the test of the centuries for instance, the law of gravitation and the belief that the world is round. Evolution, still to be accepted as a working idea by many, has never been and [illegible] demonstrated, for God only [illegible] created the universe [illegible] fact is sufficient for us. He [illegible] and controls it in His own [illegible] and until He chooses to reveal to us the method we can remain silent and trust in Him. He doeth all things well.

2. God knows all about the spiritual world. We live in two worlds, the natural and the spiritual. God understands the latter as well as the former. He conceived the great plan of man's redemption through the sacrifice of his Son, Jesus Christ. Through His power the Son executed the plan, and the Holy Spirit applies the redemption of Christ to the believing soul. He understands all the mysteries of the atonement and the other great truths of our religion. To seek out what God has hidden is not for us. Let us act on what He has revealed and leave the unfathomable mysteries to Him. It is ours to believe, His to save us through Christ's blood. It is ours to trust Him even in clouds and darkness and His to protect and preserve us. Will we do it?

BIBLE READINGS

Job xii, 22-25; xxxiv, 18-25; Ps. xxxiii, 12-22; Prov. iii, 1-3; Dan. ii, 19-22; Amos ix, 1-4; Jas. i, 1-9.

A Labor of Love.

An interesting history is attached to a Christian Endeavor mission hall at Frogmore, England, situated six miles from Eversley, the home of Charles Kingsley, says the Christian Endeavor Times. It was built by the Baptist Endeavorers of Camberley, two miles from Frogmore. These Endeavorers started the work in Frogmore by holding cottage prayer meetings, which were so much appreciated by the people and blessed of God that within sixteen months they grew into the work of this mission hall, a building that seats more than 100 persons. It was built by the voluntary and unpaid labor of the young men of the society, helped by a few friends. The work was in hand for seven months, but the Endeavorers did not tire of it, and almost every evening, after the regular work of the day was over, some of them were found adding a little to this labor of love.

The Committee System.

The committee system, like the prayer meeting and the pledge, is one of the unique and distinctive things which Christian Endeavor has brought to the young people of the world. It has emphasized personal responsibility. It has given them something to do. It has put into a million minds the thought: "I, too, am a worker in the Master's kingdom. I may be young and ignorant and uninfluential, but I have my task as truly as the minister has his or the Sunday school superintendent has his. A member of a committee is one to whom something has been committed, and the particular task assigned to me has been committed to me both by the election of the society and by the will of God. Then I will do my best on my committee for Christ's sake."—Dr. Francis E. Clark.

Press Work Committee Points.

Be ashamed to own a skillful pen that is not consecrated to Christ.

Every society should have a press committee, if only of one member.

Place upon it the society's most skillful writers and also some Endeavorers whom they will train up for the work.

What to write about—anything connected with your society or church that is of interest to the people for whom you write. Do not hastily conclude that because a matter interests you it will therefore interest every one else.

How to write—neatly, accurately, systematically, pointedly, originally, briefly. Practice the best ways of saying things. Study the best journals for models. Do not expect to be most effective without great pains taking.—Irish Endeavorer.

Commonsense Elasticity.

"C. E. stands for commonsense elasticity," writes Rev. J. D. Lamont. "I find that one reason why we have so many nondescript or mongrel societies is because of the misapprehension that one cannot form a Christian Endeavor society without being obliged to employ all the committees and methods suggested by the literature of the movement. This is a grave error. The one essential thing is the pledge

Two Thousand Requests.

When the Australian commonwealth was inaugurated some years ago Endeavorers sent 2,000 post cards to the members of parliament asking them to vote for the inclusion of the name of God in the constitution and for the opening of parliament with prayer.

Promise!

I promise that as best I can
I'll do my little task each day
And nothing shirk.
I'll let Christ have His way in me
I'll show unswerving loyalty
In all my work.

—John R. Clements in Australian Christian Call.

...h, not in the least; certainly not in little Sammy Worrell. The person I had reference to chances to be a young woman, having dark eyes, and a wealth of auburn hair. We met quite by accident, and the sole clew I now possess to her identity is a claim she advanced to being your 'star' pupil."

Miss Spencer sighed somewhat regretfully, and her eyes fell. "I fear it must have been Naida, from your description. But she is scarcely more than a child. Surely, lieutenant, it is not possible that you have become interested in her?"

...smiled pleasantly. "At least 18, not? I was somewhat impressed ...er evident originality and hoped ...ew our slight acquaintanceship ... more formal manner. She is ...tar' pupil, then?"

..., she is not really in my school ... but I outline the studies she ... at home, and lend her such ... as I consider best adapted for her reading. She is such a strange girl!"

"Ind...?" She appeared to me to be extr..., unconventional, with a de...cided tendency for mischief. Is that your mea...ing?"

"Partly... She manages to do every...hing in a different way from other... Her mind seems peculiarly ...ndent, and she is so unreserve... ...estern in her ways and languag... ...t I was referring rather to her ...aste in books—she devours everything."

"You mean as a student?"

"Well, yes, I suppose so; at least she appears to possess the faculty of absorbing every bit of information, like a sponge. Sometimes she actually startles me with her odd questions. I really believe Mr. Wynkoop seeks to avoid meeting her, she has shocked him so frequently in religious matters."

"Does she make light of his faith?"

"Oh, no, not that exactly, at least it is not her intention. But she wants to know everything—why we believe this and why we believe that, doctrines which no one else ever dreams of questioning, and he cannot seem to make them clear to her mind. Some of her questions are so irreverent as to be positively shocking to a spiritually minded person."

They lapsed into silence, swinging easily to the guidance of the music. His face was grave and thoughtful. This picture just drawn of the perverse Naida had not greatly lowered her in his estimation, although he felt instinctively that Miss Spencer was not altogether pleased with his evident interest in another.

"It is very interesting to know that you two met in so unconventional a way," she ventured, softly, "and so sly of her not even to mention it to me. We are room-mates, you know, and consequently quite intimate, although she possesses many peculiar characteristics which I cannot in the least approve. I shall certainly do my best to guide her aright. Would you mind giving me some details of your meeting?"

For a moment he hesitated, feeling that if the girl had not seen fit to confide her adventure to this particular friend, it was hardly his place to do so. Then, remembering that he had already said enough to arouse curiosity, which might easily be developed into suspicion, he determined his course. In a few words the brief story was frankly told, and apparently proved quite amusing to Miss Spencer.

"Oh, that was Naida, beyond a doubt" she exclaimed, with a laugh of satisfaction. "It is all so characteristic of her. I only wonder how she chanced to guess your name; but really she appeared to possess some peculiar gift in thus discerning facts hidden from others."

The music coming to a pause, they slowly traversed the room.

"I presume, then, she is not present?" he said, quietly.

Miss Spencer glanced into his face, the grave tone making her apprehensive that she might have gone too far. She was here earlier in the evening, but now that you remind me of it, I do not recall having noticed her of late. But, really, lieutenant, it is no part of my duty to chaperon the young girl. Mrs. Herndon could probably inform you of her present whereabouts."

Miss Spencer was conscious of the sting of failure, and her face flushed with vexation. "It is extremely close in here, don't you think?" she complained. "And I was so careless as to mislay my fan. I feel almost suffocated."

"Did you leave it at home?" he questioned. "Possibly I might discover a substitute somewhere in the room."

"Oh, no; I would never think of troubling you to such an extent. No doubt this feeling of lassitude will pass away shortly. It was very foolish of me, but I left the fan with my wraps at the hotel. It can be recovered when we go across to supper."

"It will be no more than a pleasure to recover it for you," he protested, gallantly.

The stairs leading down from the hall entrance were shrouded in darkness, the street below nearly deserted of loiterers, although lights streamed forth resplendently from the undraped windows of the Occidental and the hotel opposite. Assisted in his search by Mrs. Guffy, the officer succeeded in recovering the lost fan, and started to return. Just without the hotel door, under the confusing shadows of the wide porch, he came suddenly face to face with a young woman, the unexpected encounter a mutual and embarrassing surprise.

CHAPTER XV.
An Unusual Girl.

The girl was without wraps, her dress of some light, fleecy material fitting her slender figure exquisitely, her head uncovered; within her eyes Brant imagined he could detect the glint of tears. She spoke first, her voice faltering slightly.

"Will you kindly permit me to pass?"

He stepped instantly to one side, bowing as he did so.

"I beg your pardon for such seeming rudeness," he said, gravely. "I have been seeking you all the evening, yet this unexpected meeting caught me quite unawares."

"You have been seking me? That is strange. For what reason, pray?"

"To achieve what you were once kind enough to suggest as possible—the formality of an introduction. It would seem, however, that fate makes our meetings informal."

"That is your fault, not mine."

"I gladly assume all responsibility, if you will only waive the formality and accept my friendship."

Her face seemed to lighten, while her lips twitched as if suppressing a smile. "You are very forgetful. Did I not tell you that we Presbyterians are never guilty of such indiscretions?"

"I believe you did, but I doubt your complete surrender to the creed."

"Doubt! Only our second time of meeting and you already venture to doubt! This can scarcely be construed into a compliment, I fear."

"Yet to my mind it may prove the very highest type of compliment," he returned, reassured by her manner. "For a certain degree of independence in both thought and action is highly commendable. Indeed, I am going to be bold enough to add that it was these very attributes that awakened my interest in you."

"Oh, indeed; you cause me to blush already. My frankness, I fear, bids fair to cost me all my friends, and I may even go beyond your pardon, if the perverse spirit of my nature so move me."

"The risk of such a catastrophe is mine, and I would gladly dare that much to get away from conventional commonplace. One advantage of such meetings as ours is an immediate insight into each other's deeper nature. For one I shall sincerely rejoice if you will permit the good fortune of our chance meeting to be alone sponsor for our future friendship. Will yor not say yes?"

She looked at him with greater earnestness, her young face sobered by the words spoken. Whatever else she may have seen revealed there, the countenance bending slightly toward her was a serious, manly one, inspiring respect, awakening confidence.

"And I do agree," she said, extending her hand in a girlish impulse. "It will, at least, be a new experience and therefore worth the trial. I will even endeavor to restrain my rebellious spirit, so that you will not be unduly shocked."

He laughed, now placed entirely at his ease. "Your meed of mercy is appreciated, fair lady. Is it your desire to return to the hall?"

She shook her head positively. "A cheap, gaudy show, all bluster and vulgarity. Even the dancing is a mere parody. I early tired of it."

"Then let us choose the better part, and sit here on the bench, the night our own."

He conducted her across the porch to the darkest corner, where only rifts of light stole trembling in between the shadowing vines, and there found convenient seats. A moment they remained in silence, and he could hear her breathing.

"Have you truly been at the hall," she questioned, "or were you merely fibbing to awaken my interest?"

"I truly have been," he answered, "and actually have danced a measure with the fair guest of the evening."

"With Phoebe Spencer! And yet you dare pretend now to retain an interest in me? Lieut. Brant, you must be a most talented deceiver, or else the strangest person I ever met. Such a miracle has never occurred before!"

"Well, it has certainly occurred now; nor am I in this any vain deceiver. I truly met Miss Spencer. I was the recipient of her most entrancing smiles; I listened to her modulated voice; I bore her off, a willing captive, from a throng of despairing admirers; I danced with her, gazing down into her eyes, with her fluffy hair brushing my cheek, yet resisted all her charms and came forth thinking only of you."

"Indeed? Your proof?"

He drew the white satin fan forth from his pocket, and held it out toward her with mock humility. "This, unbelieving princess. Dispatched by the fair lady in question to fetch this bauble from the dressing-room, I forgot my urgent errand in the sudden delight of finding you."

"The case seems fully proved," she confessed, laughingly, "and it is surely not my duty to punish the culprit. What did you talk about? But, pshaw, I know well enough without asking—she told you how greatly she admired the romance of the west, and begged you to call upon her with a recital of your own exploits. Have I not guessed aright?"

"Partially, at least; some such expressions were used."

"Of course, they always are. I do not know whether they form merely a part of her stock in trade, or are spoken earnestly. You would laugh to hear the tales of wild and thrilling adventure which she picks up, and actually believes. That Jack Moffat possesses the most marvelous imagination for such things, and if I make fun of his impossible stories she becomes angry in an instant."

"I am afraid you do not greatly admire this Miss Spencer?"

"Oh, but I do; truly I do. You must not think me ungrateful. No one has ever helped me more, and beneath this mask of artificiality she is really a noble-hearted woman. I do not understand the necessity for people to lead false lives. Is it this way in all society—eastern society, I mean? Do men and women there continually scheme and flirt, smile and stab, forever assuming parts like so many play-actors?"

"It is far too common," he admitted, touched by her naive questioning. "What is known as fashionable social life has become an almost pitiful sham, and you can scarcely conceive the relief it is to meet with one utterly uncontaminated by its miserable deceits, its shallow make-believes. It is no wonder you shock the nerves of such people; the deed is easily accomplished."

"But I do not mean to." And she looked at him gravely, striving to make him comprehend. "I try so hard to be—be commonplace, and—and satisfied. Only there is so much that seems silly, useless, pitifully contemptible that I lose all patience. Perhaps I need proper training in what Miss Spencer calls refinement; but why should I pretend to like what I don't like, and to believe what I don't believe? Cannot one act a lie as well as speak one? And is it no longer right to search after the truth?"

"I have always felt it was our duty to discover the truth wherever possible," he said, thoughtfully; "yet, I confess, the search is not fashionable, nor the earnest seeker popular."

A little trill of laughter flowed from between her parted lips, but the sound was not altogether merry.

"Most certainly I am not. They all scold me, and repeat with manifest horror the terrible things I say, being unconscious that they are evil. Why should I suspect thoughts that come to me naturally. I want to know, to understand. I grope about in the dark. It seems to me sometimes that this whole world is a mystery. I go to Mr. Wynkoop with my questions, and they only seem to shock him. Why should they? God must have put all these doubts and wonderings into my mind, and there must be an answer for them somewhere. Mr. Wynkoop is a good man, I truly respect him. I want to please him, and I admire his intellectual attainments; but how can he accept so much on faith and be content? I know I am a perfect heathen,—Miss Spencer says I am,—but do you think it is so awful for me to want to know these things?"

"You merely express clearly what thousands feel without the moral courage to utter it. The saddest part of it all is, the deeper we delve the less we are satisfied in our intellectual natures. We merely succeed in learning that we are the veriest pygmies. Men like Mr. Wynkoop are simply driven back upon faith as a last resort, absolutely baffled by an impenetrable wall, against which they batter mentally in vain."

"Are you a church member?"

"Yes."

"Do you believe those things you do not understand?"

He drew a deep breath, scarcely knowing at that moment how best to answer, yet sincerely anxious to lead this girl toward the light.

"The majority of men do not talk much about such matters. They hold them sacred. Yet I will speak frankly with you. I could not statte in words my faith so that it would be clearly apprehended by the mind of another. I am in the church because I believe its efforts are toward righteousness, because I believe the teachings of Christ are perfect, His life the highest possible type of living, and because through Him we receive all the information regarding a future existence which we possess. That my mind rests satisfied I do not say; I simply accept what is given, preferring a little light to total darkness."

"But here they refuse to accept any one like that. They say I am not yet in a fit state of mind."

"Such a judgment would seem to me narrow. I was fortunate in coming under the influence of a broad-minded religious teacher. To my statement of doubts he simply said: 'Believe what you can; live the very best you can, and keep your mind open toward the light.' It seems to me now this is all that anyone can do whose nature will not permit of blind, unquestionable faith."

"I am so glad you have spoken in that way," she confessed. "I shall never feel quite so much alone in the world again, and I shall see these matters from a different viewpoint. Is it wrong—unwomanly, I mean—for me to question spiritual things?"

"I am unable to conceive why it should be. Surely woman ought to be as deeply concerned in things spiritual as man."

"How very strange it is that we should thus drift into such an intimate talk at our second meeting!" she exclaimed. "But it seems so easy, so natural, to converse frankly with some people—they appear to draw out all that is best in one's heart. Then there are others who seem to parch and wither up every germ of spiritual life."

"There are those in the world who truly belong together," he urged, daringly. "They belong to each other by some divine law. They may never be privileged to meet; but if they do, the commingling of their minds and souls is natural. This talk of ours to-night has, perhaps, done me as much good as you."

"Oh, I am so glad if it has! I—I do not believe you and Miss Spencer conversed in this way?"

"Heaven forbid! And yet it might puzzle you to guess what was the main topic of our conversation."

"Did it interest you?"

"Deeply."

"Well, then, it could not be dress, or men, or western romance, or society in Boston, or the beautiful weather. I guess it was books."

"Wrong; they were never mentioned."

"Then I shall have to give up, for I do not remember any other subjects she talks about."

"Yet it was the most natural topic imaginable—yourself."

"You were discussing me? Why, how did that happen?"

"Very simply, and I was wholly to blame. To be perfectly honest, Miss Naida, I attended the dance to-night for no other object than to meet you again. But I had argued myself into the belief that you were Miss Spencer. The discovery of my mistake merely intensified my determination to learn who you really were. With this purpose, I interviewed Miss Spencer, and during the course of our conversation the facts of my first meeting with you became known."

SIX NORTH AMERICAN ARTICLES TELL ABOUT ATHLETICS.

Probable American League Champions Subject of Notable Series.

In the most exciting race the American League ever saw the Athletics now look a sure winner. Until the end of the season they will be playing at home, while their rivals, Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland, are batting on the opposing grounds.

Apparently it's all over but the cheering, and everybody in this part of the country is discussing the Athletics and their famous manager, Connie Mack. The fans want to know all about the team, who the men are, where they came from, where they live, what their habits and peculiarities are.

The North American began Sunday, September 1, to publish a series of six articles, which will tell this whole story. They will be written by George M. Graham, sporting editor of the North American, who, having been with the team on the northern training trip, is familiar with every step by which the club was whipped into shape by Manager Mack and formed into the present invincible combination.

Every stage of this development will be covered, and there will be new stories about members of the team, which, with Rube Waddell, Chief Bender, Topsy Hartsel, Socks Seybold and such celebrities, includes perhaps more famous baseball characters than any team in the country.

Walt McDougall, the North American's famous cartoonist, will contribute a series of drawings, which will illustrate the humorous side of the recital.

The articles will also be illustrated by photographs.

Order at once, and make sure that during the next six weeks you get every one of this series on the team that looks likely to bring Philadelphia its third pennant in seven years, and which, if victorious, will play the Chicago Nationals for the world's championship.

LITERARY

In The Circle for September, Ernest K. Coulter writes of "The Big Brothers and the Children's Court" with such enthusiasm for the splendid results which those "Big Brothers" are achieving in the lives of the children of the tenements that the article is an inspiration which must leave its marks in the lives of the readers.

"Current Literature," remarked Upton Sinclair as he looked over the September issue, "is the most indispensable magazine in the United States." The issue in question, like its predecessors, brings the reader into touch with the most vital world-currents. There is nothing scrappy about it and nothing dull. Every article is well digested and brilliantly illuminates the questions dealt with.

The Popular Science Monthly for September contains the following articles: "The Problem of Age, Growth and Death," by Prof. Charles S. Minot; "A Scientific Comedy of Errors," Prof. T. D. A. Cockerell and F. B. R. Hellems; "Notes on the Development of Telephone Service," Fred De Land; "Mars as Seen in the Lowell Refractor," G. R. Agassiz; "Hermann von Helmholtz," "Linnean Celebrations in Sweden," "Radium Emanation and the Transmutation of the Elements."

The September number of the National is filled with an abundance of high-class fiction and verse, and it is a number that will appeal to magazine readers at this time of the season. Among the special articles is one by Sidney J. Dillon on "The Des Moines Plan," dealing with the new method of city government in Iowa's capital, and "Levelling Our Population," by Carlyle Ellis.

Perhaps the most significant contribution to Success Magazine for September is the article "Will Roosevelt Run?" by David Graham Phillips. Mr. Phillips believes that the importance of the work which the President has begun and the belief of the people in its necessity will compel him to accept another nomination and election.

Mayor's Proxy.

Mayor Fisk telegraphed his proxy as delegate to the county convention this morning to City Collector John W. Murray. Mr. Fisk wired that he expected to be on hand at the State convention September 19.

FUNERAL OF H. L. JOHNSON.

Obsequies Attended by Large Gathering of People.

The funeral service of Henry L. Johnson, of New York, who died at the home of his niece, Mrs. William A. Pinto, on West Eighth street, on Tuesday, was held from the above residence this morning at 10:30 o'clock. Rev. George Montgomery, assistant to Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, New York, of which Mr. Johnson was one of the leading members, officiated.

There was a large attendance of relatives and friends, including many from New York, among whom were a number of former business associates of Mr. Johnson. The burial took place today in Greenwood cemetery.

Case Dismissed.

The third trial of the case of Charles F. Smith against Eugene P. Farwell, of Berkeley Heights, for possession of premises occupied by the plaintiff and defendant at that place, was held before Justice Holmes and a jury of twelve men, at Summit, yesterday. This time the case was taken from the jury and dismissed on argument, the defendant being given possession. Lawyer J. Henry Crane represented Farwell, while E. L. McKurgan, of Summit, represented the plaintiff.

John Chandler Buried.

The funeral of John Chandler was held at 2.30 o'clock this afternoon from the home, 508 Watchung avenue. Rev. A. C. McCrea conducted the service at the home. The Masonic organizations were largely represented at the Methodist cemetery in Plainfield avenue, where the burial took place. The members of Jerusalem Lorge, No. 26, F. & A. M. took charge of the service. A delegation from Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., was present.

Manslaughter Trial.

The trial of George G. Hollins, white, of Elizabeth, charged with manslaughter in the case of the death of James Thorn, colored, also of that place, was moved this morning in the Union County Court. It is expected that the case will occupy the whole day. Foster M. Voorhees represents the prisoner.

Chief Unable to Attend.

Chief T. O. Doane, who has been detained at his home with a severe attack of erysipelas, was unable to attend the firemen's convention at Wildwood today, although much improved. It will be several days before the chief will be able to leave the house.

May Indict Perkins.

When the September term of Court opened at Hackensack, yesterday, the court instructed the jury to investigate the killing, August 9, of a young negro at Oradell, by Assemblyman Perkins' automobile, and to find an indictment according to the facts.

CHIMPANZEE HAD MUCH FUN.

Escaped from French Circus for Brief Spell of Liberty.

A large chimpanzee performing at a fair in Montmartre, France, escaped recently, and created a panic in the district. The animal gives his performance under the direction of La Goulue, the Mouin Rouge dancer who took to lion taming and went through her marriage ceremony in a lion's den. Zizi, as he is called, escaped while his keeper's attention was momentarily attracted elsewhere, and made straight for the Metropolitan railway station at the Boulevard Barbes. Entering the booking office he nearly frightened the woman booking clerk out of her wits. He seized bundles of tickets, and amused himself by flinging them into the air and watching their descent in a shower. When he had thus made an end of several hundreds of packages he ran into the station, creating a panic among the waiting passengers. They fled across the line and down the stairs into the street, and two policemen and six porters were summoned to try and capture Zizi. As soon as Zizi saw them coming he bolted down the line, and was so anxious to escape his pursuers that he did not notice an approaching train. The driver pulled up in time to avoid killing the animal, and Zizi capered off on another line, and stopped a second train in the same way. After much chasing and dodging Zizi was eventually caught in a sack, put into a strait waistcoat, and taken to the police station, where La Goulue appeared and bailed him out early the next morning.

WHY HE DID NOT LAUGH.

Humorist's Sense of Modesty Kept Him Silent.

A certain well-known humorist recently attended a banquet at which he was seated beside a man who seemed to have almost a mania for story-telling. He began with the oysters and had at least one story for each course clear down to the Roquefort. The humorist listened in patience, but did not smile or make any comment. Finally the story-teller noticed the fact that he was not eliciting any expressions of mirth, and, being one who was not at all afflicted with diffidence, he asked: "Say, old man, what's the matter with my stories, anyhow? You haven't cracked a smile over any of them." "If I haven't seemed to appreciate your stories you will have to blame my modesty." "Your modesty? There's nothing about any of the stories I've told that ought to interfere with anybody's modesty. At least I supposed they were clean. If there's a double meaning in any of them, for heaven's sake tell me. I told nearly everyone of them to a lot of women the other night." "There's nothing at all the matter with them. They're good, clean stories. Nevertheless, my modesty forbids me to laught at them. I wrote them."

To Save Marble Buildings.

It has been estimated that the combustion of coal in London discharges at least half a million tons of sulphuric acid into the air each year, and the effect upon certain building stones is disastrous. The acid washed down by rains attacks the lime of marbles, limestones and calcareous sandstones, forming gypsum and causing the surface to swell and crumble. A treatment for the decaying stonework is the application of solution of baryta, which forms an insoluble sulphate with the gypsum and liberates lime, which the carbnoic acid of the air converts into the original binding cement of the stone. Referring to an experience at the Chapter house at Westminster, Prof. A. H. Church says that carving so soft as to be brought away by the finger was made sound and harder than the newly quarried stone.

Justice for Wives.

A bill to give married women the control of their own earnings in France has reached the stage of the second reading. As things are now, if a married woman earns a dollar by taking in washing, or thousands of dollars by writing a successful novel, every cent of it belongs to her husband. If she secures the money and puts it in the bank, she cannot draw it out without his written consent, but he can draw it out without hers and spend it as he pleases. For 14 years women have been working to get this law changed.

Royal Spats.

We read in an ancient chronicle that when a letter not altogether courteous was sent to the emperor of Japan by the emperor of China, the mikado opened his answer thus: "The emperor of the land where the sun rises addresses himself to the emperor of the land where the sun sets." On another occasion, when the Chinese emperor had the audacity to demand the submission of Japan, that spirited country chopped off the heads of the luckless ambassadors!

A Great Swimmer.

A remarkable swim by an eight-year-old horse, says a Kildysart telegram, is occupying the attention of the local inhabitants. It appears that a farmer named Morgan Macmahon, who lives on a small island in the estuary of the Shannon, took the horse by boat to the mainland, and after working it all day turned it loose in the evening with a number of other horses. When the owner awoke next morning what was his astonishment to find the faithful animal peacefully grazing near its stable. It was wet as from a swim, and there is not the slightest doubt that the horse had swum all the way from the mainland to the island, a distance of a little less than three miles.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Terms of Latin Origin.

In a legal sense an "innuendo" was originally an averment made by the plaintiff in a libel action, putting into plain words the injurious sense he detected in an insinuation published by the defendant. It is the ablative case of a Latin gerund that has become a common English noun substantive. Another Latin ablative with a similar modern history is "folio," which literally means "on page" so-and-so. The English language absorbs all cases in this fashion at its pleasure. There is "quorum" (genitive plural and "omnibus" (dative plural), with "ignoramus" as an English noun that was once a Latin verb in the first person plural.

Onions as Irrigators.

A farmer has made a discovery that will be of vast importance to farmers during a dry season. He has found that by planting onions and potatoes in the same field in alternate rows the onions, being so strong, bring tears to the eyes of the potatoes in such volumes that the roots of the vines are kept moist and a big crop is raised in spite of the drought. It is time to commence putting out your onion sets now.—Reed City (Minn.) Clarion.

SENATOR ACKERMAN HOME

After Fulfilling Mission Abroad, Solon Makes Fastest Trip Across Water.

SENDS PRESS WIRELESS

On Board Lusitania, 900 Miles From New York, He Got News of Primary Results from This Paper.

After making the fastest trip on record across the Atlantic, from Queenstown, State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, of this city, set foot in America today after a ten weeks' trip abroad on a mission of the State government. The Lusitania, the queen of the seas, on which he was a passenger, sped across the water in exactly five days and fifty-four minutes, beating the record held by the Cunard line steamship Lucania by six hours and twenty-seven minutes. The Lusitania put into dock at 12:15. It makes an average speed of 23½ knots an hour.

Ernest R. Ackerman.

The genial and able State Senator looked much benefited in health as he tripped down the gang plank with his wife. As he has not been in touch with New Jersey's affairs while abroad he had nothing to say about politics. When more than 900 miles from shore he was made acquainted with the results of the primaries in the State by The Daily Press. That was the only news he had received since this paper had told him of happenings before he took passage on the Lusitania last Saturday.

Senator Ackerman was met at the dock by a number of personal friends and admirers. In the party were his secretary, Edgar F. Shepard, his brother, Marion S. Ackerman, and Charles Sminck. After his baggage had been marked "O. K." by the customs' inspector, Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman started at once for their home here.

Last night the following wireless was received by The Daily Press from the Senator:

"9, 12, 1907.

"Steamship Lusitania, via Halifax, N. S.

"The Daily Press,

"Plainfield, N. J."

"Your courteous message, which was highly appreciated, was received 900 miles from New York.

"ERNEST R. ACKERMAN."

The message to which the Senator referred was sent by wireless on Wednesday morning after the results of the primaries were all in. It read:

"State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman,

"Steamship Lusitania;

"Regulars swept Hudson, Essex and Union counties. Assemblyman Perkins routed.

PERKINS CHEERFUL LOSER

Makes a Sprightly Speech Pledging Regularity After Convention Nominations.

PARROT EASY WINNER

King Gets Only 36 Votes—Perkins Got 29, Seven of Them From Plainfield.

With never a scratch to show that anybody had tried to mar its complete, the slate, as announced in yesterday's Daily Press exclusively, went through at the Republican county convention, in Turn Hall, Elizabeth, yesterday afternoon. It was a quiet affair, an energetic handful of Perkins boomers on the sidelines making the only show of enthusiasm. Quiet, but very satisfactory. Perkins went down to defeat with a smile on his face, and before the convention closed he cheerfully pledged himself to support the ticket, and was welcomed home. He got 27 votes—seven of them from Plainfield. Carlton B. Pierce, of Cranford, A. L. Kerstein, of Rahway, and Assemblyman Moxen, of Elizabeth, the Assembly nominees, got an overwhelming vote on the first ballot. Pierce received 110, Moxen 126 and Kerstein 10. George T. Parrott was renominated for surrogate in the same easy fashion, Bejamin King, director of the Board of Freeholders, who sought the nomination, receiving only 36 of the 141 votes.

Dr. W. H. Donaldson, of Linden, was the only man who wanted the nomination for coroner. They gave it to him without delay.

The delegates settled down to business without losing time, and did what they had to do swiftly and harmoniously. Former Judge W. R. Codington was as wise a chairman as could have been picked ,and contented himself with a brief, pat speech. After that he kept things moving.

Six candidates for the Assembly nominations were made. Besides the major figures in the contest, Charles H. Angleman, of Rahway, and Edward J. Woodling, og Cranford, were named. The latter was the candidate of former Assemblyman William Hall, of Cranford, who had been suspected of having something or other up his sleeve. Woodling got 25 votes, Angleman got 20. Charles N. Codding, who placed Perkins in nomination made the motion to make the nominations unanimous, and it went through quickly.

In nominating Perkins, Mr. Codding made the best-turned speech of the day. Earnestly and eloquently he presented Perkins' claim to consideration, basing it wholly on his legislative record and not at all on how many consecutive terms other men in other offices or other parts of the State may have had. Perkins, he said, had ability, honestly, integrity and industry, and his record at the capitol was one that had never been excelled.

The speech was cheered and applauded from the rear of the hall, where a group of Westfielders and other Perkins supporters were gathered. Perkins himself heard the speech and watched the voting from behind one of the rails that run down the sides of the hall.

The Perkins votes came from Elizabeth, where he got 4; Plainfield, 7; Westfield, 8; Rahway, 4; Cranford, 3; Clark, Linden and Garwood, each. Six of the Plainfield votes came from the Second Ward and one from the Third. The Second Ward delegation gave Pierce 5 votes, Angleman 6 and Woodling 1. The Third gave Pierce 5 and Moxon and Kersting 6. The First and Fourth voted solidly for the slate.

King got 5 of his 36 votes from Plainfield. Rahway voted solidly for him and Westfield gave him 5. As soon as the roll had been called former Mayor Furber, of Rahway, who nominated him, offered a motion to make the nomination unanimous, without waiting for the announcement of the count.

After the nominations Chairman Coddington appointed a committee to escort all the candidates before the convention, defeated as well as successful, to the platform. Of the defeated Perkins was the only one to come forward, but he was the one they wanted. He took his place with his debonair sprightliness unimpaired, and faced the delegates, after the candidates had had their say, with a good humored smile. The promise in the smile was caught by the delegates, and they responded with a burst of hand-clapping. The promise was carried out by the speech, and as he declared himself back in the ranks the delegates welcomed him with a cordiality that seemed to wipe out the bitterness of the campaign.

He was a Republican, Mr. Perkins said, and he was glad Union county was Republican. And he hoped to

W. A. WESTPHAL IS DEAD

Former Freeholder's Death Results from a Hemmorhage at Rahway.

ONCE IN THE COUNCIL

His Wife Killed in Auto Accident While With Man Who Subsequently Dies After His Own Wife Commits Suicide.

William A. Westphal, for many years a resident of this city, where he served for several terms both as a member of Common Council and of the Union County Board of Freeholders, died suddenly in Rahway yesterday, following a hemorrhage of the lungs. He had been in poor health since the death of his wife, which was the result of an automobile accident. She and William Stanbery, of Scotch Plains, who has since died, were riding in his automobile near Dunellen, one night, when the machine collided with a rig belonging to William Harrison, of that place. Mrs. Westphal received fatal injuries and died a day or two later without regaining consciousness. A few months later Mrs. Stanbery committed suicide at her home in Scotch Plains, and it was but a short time afterward that her husband died.

For a number of years Mr. Westphal was engaged in the grocery business with his father, Frederick Westphal, their place of business being at Liberty and West Fourth street. The son became greatly interested in politics and was one of the leaders of the Republican party in the Fourth Ward. He was elected to the Common Council from that ward and served several terms. He was afterward made the party nominee for freeholder from this city.

After his retirement as freeholder he purchased the livery business of the late Daniel S. Roberts on West Front street, but his health was such that he was unable to attend to it properly. He afterward closed out the business, and while he retained his residence here, spent a great deal of his time in Newark, where his son was employed and where his daughter, Miss Ada Westphal, was employed as a school teacher. They both survive him.

The funeral service will be held from the Church of the Holy Cross Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

NEW SCHOOL BUILDING BIDS TAKEN ON SEPT. 30

TWO STORY STRUCTURE TO BE ERECTED ON DARROW AVE.

Completed plans for the new primary school building to be erected on Darrow avenue by the Board of Education, were submitted and accepted at the September meeting of the Board, last night. It has not yet been decided whether the building will be constructed of stone or brick. The Board announced that the plans would be on file Friday, September 20, and that the bids for the work will be received at a special meeting to be held on Monday night, September 30. The plans were drawn by Hale & Rogers, New York architects.

The new school will be two stories in height and will be equipped with every modern convenience. It will take the place of the Washington School property which has been sold to St. Mary's church. The new location it is believed will better accomodate that rapidly growing section of the West End.

The other business considered at the meeting was chiefly routine.

New Stationer.

William H. Olmstead, who has been connected with the United States Coffee Company, of this city, for a number of years, has purchased the newspaper and stationery business of D. H. Blaney & Son, at 331 Watchung avenue, and will take charge on Monday, September 16.

SEARCH FOR VETERAN'S HEIRS IN THIS CITY

INFORMATION NECESSARY TO SETTLEMENT OF ESTATE IS LACKING.

Search for the heirs of the late William Spooner, which is being conducted by J. R. Carter, of Newark, has led to this city. It has been learned that Spooner came originally from this city. Information as to the heirs is needed for the sttlement of the estate. It can't be settled without definite knowledge of their whereabouts.

Investigation has disclosed the fact that Spooner enlisted in the Third Regiment, New Jersey Infantry, becoming a member of Company I, but beyond that fact, and that he lived here at the time, nothing has been learned. Inquiry has failed to bring any heirs in this city to light, but it is believed one or more are here, and every effort is bein made to "locate" them.

Mr. Carter has inserted an advertisement in The Daily Press, asking for information. His address is 93 South Tenth street, Newark. It is absolutely necessary to get the information desired if the estate is to be settled, and those in charge of the property are anxious to settle it without delay.

SEVEN LAWYERS FIGURE IN A PROPERTY SUIT

MUCH MIXED LEGAL TANGLE OVER BUILDING OPERATION.

The J. D. Loizeaux Lumber Company and William C. Smith have filed mechanic's liens in the Union County Circuit Court on property of Davis Steinman and Morris Rosenberg, of this city, as builders and owners, in what promises to be one of the most complicated cases ever tried in the county courts.

The property affected consists of three uncompleted houses just outside of the city line at Terrill road and East Second street. There are mortgages on them held by Isaac Vail, M. A. Valentine, the Ann Spencer Estate and Miss Laura J. Runyon; together with second mortgages held by M. A. Rose and Morris Rosenberg.

J. B. Coward was looking out for the interests of Steinman and Rosenberg, when he died. He is said to have advanced money belonging to Isaac Vail and M. A. Valentine. After Mr. Coward's death the estate was represented by Nelson and William N. Runyon. It is said that the firm paid out money belonging to the Ann Spencer Estate and Miss Laura J. Runyon, without getting the mortgagee's consent and the releases. It is also said that Steinman instead of paying the mechanics retained the money. As a result of the mixup six suits have been started, and the papers are returnable in the Union County Circuit Court, September 18.

Nelson and William N. Runyon represent M. A. Valentine and Miss Laura J. Runyon; Francis J. Blatz several painters and plumbers; V. W. Nash, Jr., the Ann Spencer Estate; Coddington & Swackhamer, Morris Rosenberg; John P. Owens, Davis Steinman.

WOULD ENLARGE ITS POWERS.

Somerville Board to Ask Legislature for Wider Scope to Borrow Money.

The board of commissioners of Somerville has decided to appoint a legislative committee to endeavor to have a bill passed to enlarge the powers of that body. Under the present charter there are no means to borrow money for unusual expenses. This year the board has found it necessary to erect a new engine house.

In doing so it has used up nearly all the available funds and the streets of the town are in bad condition. It is now desired to pave Main street with brick and concrete at a cost of about $12,000, and the board would like to borrow the money so that the work can be done without delay. President Charles C. Kenyon will be at the head of the committee, and will name the other two members.

Dr. Bleick Weds Miss Harris.

Miss Ida Mae Harris, sister of Mrs. George Mantz, of East Fifth street, and Dr. Theodore E. Bleick, of Newark, were married Wednesday night at the home of the bride's sister, Rev. E. E. Roberson, pastor of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, officiating. The wedding was a very quiet one, only the relatives and a few friends being present. The couple will reside in Newark, where the groom is a practising physician.

DOLLIVER FOR SURROGATE

Borough Recorder Being Boomed for Somerset County G. O. P. Nomination.

SMALLEY BACKS HIM

His Campaign Launched at North Plainfield Republicans' Meeting—A Strong Candidate.

When the Somerset county Republicans hold their convention at Somerville, the name of Charles L. Dolliver, of North Plainfield, will be presented for the nomination of surrogate. The convention will be called for the purpose of naming candidates for Assembly, surrogate and coroner, and with the exception of the last named office, there will be contests.

Charles M. Dolliver.

William De Mond, a Democrat, now occupies the surrogateship, and the Republicans intend to pit their strongest man against him, as he will be renominated by the minority party without question.

Ever since Mayor Newton B.Smalley, of North Plainfield, launched Dolliver's boom at the meeting of the borough Republicans two weeks ago, there has been a strong undercurrent at work in the county's political circles in favor of the bright young lawyer. It is said that in the rural districts he will get much support, and it is not unlikely that Bridgewater may at the last moment turn over some delegates to him.

Mr. Dolliver is a nephew of United States Senator John D. Dolliver, of Iowa, and is one of the most popular young men in North Plainfield. At the present time he occupies the office of recorder, and his services have given every satisfaction to the people "across the brook." Some few years ago Mr. Dolliver was the Republican nominee for Assembly, but was defeated by the Democratic candidate Samuel S. Swackalmer, also a boroughite. Dolliver's defeat was attributed to a factional fig . in his own party's ranks.

Dolliver is a graduate of the North Plainfield High School and of the New York Law School. He is in the law offices of Reed & Coddington at the present time.

MR. PERKINS' DEFEAT PLEASES THE W. C. T. U.

YOUNG MAN TELLS WHITE RIBBONERS OF HIS ROUT.

In addition to the address by Miss Keron, of Elizabeth, on prison and jail work, Clarence B. LaRue, a young man interested in local option, spoke on that subject at the afternoon session of the thirty-first annual meeting of the W. C. T. U., yesterday. He gave a brief summary of what has already been accomplished in that line and his announcement that Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, who voted against the bill last winter, had failed to get a renomination was received with great satisfaction.

The treasurer's report showed that during the year there was received and expended $760 and there is a balance on hond. Considerable interest was shown in the reports from all departments, especially that of the soldiers and sailors by Mrs. M. C. Dobbins. The results in this department have been very satisfactory and encouraging.

The Union lost two members by death since the last meeting, Mrs. Eden Boice and Mrs. James Adams. The oldest members of the local Union, Mrs. Sims, attended yesterday's meeting. She is ninety-two years old.

Y. M. C. A. Classes.

Efforts to build up the classes will be made by the Y. M. C. A. Educational Committee next week. Meetings will be held at the different shops, and the advantages of the courses to be held at the association school this fall will be enlarged upon by competent speakers.

MACHINIST IS ACCUSED

Evans Arrested on Charge of Assault With Intent to Kill.

"WANTED" IN PITTSBURG

Denies the Accusation, and Says He Can Prove An Alibi— He Belongs in This City.

Charged with felonious assault with intent to murder, John Evans, 28 years old, a machinist, living at 116 Madison avenue, was arrested yesterday by Detective-Sergeant Flynn, on a warrant sworn out in Pittsburg, Pa. It was sent to Elizabeth on Wednesday and forwarded by the police there to Chief Kiely.

Evans is accused of taking part in an assault on William Glazer, who is alleged to have been beaten for "scabbing" in one of the Pittsburg shops. Evans denies the charge, and declares he can prove a complete alibi.

The assault is alleged to have taken place on July 27. Full details of the case have not been learned by the local police, and the condition of the victim is unknown here. Evans says he was not near the scene at the time of the assault, being at a lodge meeting. He was in Pittsburg for two weeks after the date of the assault.

Evans has retained City Judge William N. Runyon and Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., as counsel. He will be arraigned before a justice this afternoon or early tomorrow morning, and application for bail, pending extradition proceedings, will be applied for.

Evans belongs in this city. He worked in Pittsburg, however, for several months before returning here five weeks ago.

G. O. P. GREATEST PARTY THAT EVER HAPPENED

CHAIRMAN CODINGTON SAYS SO IN TAKING CONVENTION CHAIR.

With their fellow-townsmen in the chair, the Plainfield delegates and lookers-on at the Republican convention in Elizabeth yesterday, felt quite at home in the party councils. As they were doubly honored by the selection, because Former Judge Codington made a most efficient chairman.

As soon as Amos Andrews and C. B. Morse, appointed for the purpose, had escorted him to the platform, he took quiet but effective control of the convention, and kept things going smoothly. His speech was brief but to the point. He was greeted with applause, and vigorous handclapping marked the close of his remarks. He said:

"Gentlemen of the Convention:

"I thank you for the honor conferred. I consider it a great honor to preside over a convention of delegates representing the Republican party, which is the greatest political party that now exists or ever has existed, in this, the greatest nation on the face of the globe, the United States of America; the party from whence come the Lincolns, the McKinleys, the Roosevelts; the party, not of promises, but of performances; the party which advocates the greatest good to the greatest number.

"Union county, one of the twenty-one subdivisions of the State of New Jersey is, and always has been an important factor in the politics of the State. It has furnished timber for every position within the gift of the people, from the lowest to the chief executive; and today, gentlemen of the convention, her sister counties are looking to you to put in nomination, such men to represent you in the legislature and in the county government as will maintain the highest moral and political influence which Union county now exerts, and you are expected to nominate such candidates as will command not only the support of every Republican voter within the county, but as well, a large share of the Democratic vote; so that when the poles are closed on election day it will simply be a question of majority."

FORT UNION'S FAVORITE

Essex Man Will Get Majority of County's Delegates for Governor.

SOME FAVOR PITNEY

Vivian Lewis and Frank H. Sommer Will Also Get Some Delegates —No Unit Rule to Be Enforced.

It can be stated with a certainty, according to the wise ones who control the situation in Union, that this county's delegation to the State convention will be much split up on the gubernatorial vote, but it is equally sure that Justice J. Franklin Fort will be supported by a majority of the delegates, with Justice Pitney, of Morris, a close second. Vivian

J. Franklin Fort.

Lewis, of Passaic, is also counted upon to command some strength, it being reliably reported that some of the rural delegates will cast their ballots for him.

Justice Fort, whose name for the nomination was first sprung by County Clerk James Calvert, of Elizabeth, it is quite sure will get a big majority if not the entire delegation from the county seat. In addition he will obtain added strength in other sections among the smaller towns. Justice Pitney appears to be the favorite in Plainfield, and the knowing ones declare that he will receive a majority of the local delegates' ballots. Moreover, he will get some scattering votes through the county. Lewis will also come in for a share of the scattering vote. As for Sommer, he has not been lost sight of, for it is quite certain the Colbyite delegates here will rush in under his banner.

Because of his absence abroad, State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman will not be a delegate, although many of the leaders desire him to be made chairman of the county delegation, as is the custom with State Senators. Mayor Fisk and George W. V. Moy, a Colbyite, are delegates from Mr. Ackerman's ward, and both have signified their intention of being in attendance.

Staggered From Cerebral Waves.

Mahlon Titus, of Mt. Bethel, was observed by Policeman John Kelly, early last night, walking deviously and uncertainly about the streets. Kelly placed him under arrest, to the apparent indifference of Mr. Titus, but to his great chagrin, as appeared when he was arraigned in the city court this morning. Mr. Ttius, who is 64 years old, and should be believed, assured Judge Runyon that he was not drunk. He said he had water on the brain, and almost any time he walked one not acquainted with the ebb and flow of the cerebral tide would think he was tight. Sentence was suspended.

H. B. Howell 90 Years Old.

Howell, Trenton's oldest resident, and for whom Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance, of this city, was named, celebrated the ninetieth anniversary of his birthday at his home in Trenton, today. During the day he was swamped with post cards and letters of congratulations from all parts of the State and other States. He also received a number of floral tributes.

The trial of George E. Hollins, of Elizabeth, charged with manslaughter, in the death of Joseph Thorn, colored, of that place, was concluded in the County Court, this morning, when the ujry after a few minutes' deliberation returned a verdict of guilty. The extreme penalty is twenty years.

stand on the platform, to advance the cause of the party. All the world loved a fighter as it loved a lover. Let them all be fighters and step forword, in spite of opposition wherever it might show itself, and see that the ticket went through from top to bottom.

He was right in the midst of the party; no quitter now or at any time. He intended to lend his voice and vigor to the election of the whole ticket. He believed the ticket would be better in every way than the one named by the Democrats.

There was no malice, no hard feelings. Until the convention, politics must necessarily be marked by strife. But it was his part to forget it all after the convention had made its choice. Not a word would he say against the party. He believed the members of it were his friends, and he was theirs. He wanted to be where the people wanted him. If that was leading a quiet, rural life at Westfield, so be it.

The speech was good humored all the way through. Perkinsesque jests lightened it, and not a note of bitterness could be detected. The delegates cheered and applauded its close.

Surrogate Parrot made the longest speech of the afternoon. He expressed his gratitude for the renomination, and defended the custom of retaining the surrogate in office. He said the position demanded it. The other candidates made brief speeches. Mr. Pierce produced a pleasant impression. Congressman C. N. Fowler, as usual, appeared at the tail end of the convention and made the customary speech. He told one of the two stories that Noah packed away in the Ark, and urged the delegates to go out and take possession of the Democratic party.

The platform adopted was not long. It favors the retention of the Bishops' law, and such legislation as will give the people the fullest opportunity to take part in nominations at the primary. The latter expression was put into the platform to meet the views of the Colbyites, after it had been submitted to the committee on resolutions. C. B. Morse, of this city, was a member of the committee. The platform is as follows:

The Republicans of Union county in convention assembled, mindful of the blessings of peace and prosperity in our nation, and of the advancement of human rights, the welfare of our commonwealth and the security and happiness in our homes, recognize with gratitude the love and protecting care of the Great Ruler of the Universe, and we commend the long and successful management of our national and State affairs by Republican administrations, and congratulate the citizens of this country on the careful and judicious oversight constantly exercised in all matters pertaining to our local and municipal welfare.

It is a matter of congratulation that the subject of railroad taxation, which has been so long a troublesome problem, is being effectively and satisfactorily solved under the provisions of laws enacted while the Republican party was in control of branches of the Legislature. The laws enacted have been upheld by the courts, and in practical operation have resulted in great gains to the municipalities in this State. In Union county there has been an increase in revenue amounting to nearly $200,000. This legislation was in accordance with recommendations in the messages of Governor Stokes, and was introduced and passed by a Republican legislature as a party measure.

The recommendations of the executive in reference to the general subject of taxation were followed by the enactment of laws that have resulted in the establishment of county board of taxation. While many difficulties have been encountered, and there still remain unsolved problems, nevertheless, the operation of the law has been beneficial, and will result in the ultimate equalization of the burden of taxation throughout the country.

The Republican Legislature, recognizing the pronounced sentiment in all parts of the State in favor of some legislation to effectively control and regulate the legalized sale of liquor, passed the act known as the "Bishops' Bills."

We favor the retention and enforcement of the law, and are opposed to its repeal, or its amendment, except in such respects as will make its operation effective.

A perfect law can only be secured by experiment, and if the Bishops' law shall in its operation be found subversive of recognized rights of individuals every effort should be made to remedy the law rather than resort to new and untried legislation. We deprecate the making of the liquor problem a political issue, and believe the taking of the question from the consideration of partisan politics would be a direct benefit to people.

We favor such further legislation concerning primary elections as may be necessary to afford the fullest opportunity for the expression of the popular will regarding nominations.

We favor the adoption of a constitutional amendment permitting a return to the plan, which so long prevailed in this State, of electing the members of Assembly from districts.

We pledge the candidates named by this convention to the faithful discharge of all public duties, the support of all measures conducive to the public welfare and pledge to them our active and hearty support.

Plainfielders were placed on all the committees. J. W. Murray, Jr., was on the credentials committee, Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., was on the committee on rules, William G. De Meza on permanent organization and County Chairman Frank H. Smith on the vacancies committee. E. L. Hand, of Scotch Plains, was one of the secretaries.

ALL ENDEAVORERS PLAN TO MEET SUNDAY NIGHT

DELEGATES TO STATE CONVENTION TO BE PICKED AT RALLY.

For the purpose of arousing interest among the Christian Endeavorers of the city, the officers of the local Christian Endeavor Union have planned to visit all of the local societies within the next few weeks. The first visit will be made Sunday night at Faith chapel at 7 o'clock, and at 7:30 o'clock the officers will attend the Endeavor meeting at the Congregational church. An effort will be made to secure a large delegation to attend the State Endeavor convention, to be held in Newark on October 9, 10 and 11.

It has also been decided to hold the first local congress on Thursday, October 3, at a place to be announced later. The first mass meeting will be held later in October at a place and time to be decided.

The officers of the local union are as follows:

President, Clarence B. Le Rue; vice president, Joel D. De Groff; secretary, Charles Windham; treasurer, George Latourette; chairman missionary committee, Frank Stewart; chairman lookout committee, F. C. Lounsbury, Jr.; chairman prayer meeting committee, Charles Neagle; chairman press committee, Miss Mildred Greene.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Sunday night services will be resumed at the Congregational church Sunday night with a special musical service. Miss Annola F. Wright, now soloist of St. Thomas' church choir, New York city, formerly in charge of the vocal music department at Adrian College, will be one of the singers.

Rev. Dr. C. W. Parsons, pastor of the Grace M. E. church, on Park place, has invited Rev. E. S. Ufford to speak and sing to his congregation and the public as well on Sunday. The interest manifested in the author and the unique presentation of the gospel under the emblem of the life-savers, has been wide-spread. He carrier a life-line which has saved seven sailors, and sings some of his solos to reach the hearts of his hearers.

George Ernest Schorb, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Clifford Schorb, formerly of this city, but now of Cumberland, Md., was baptized in the Emmanuel Episcopal church, that city, on August 25. Rev. Dr. William W. Jeffries officiated. The sponsors were J. Clifford Schorb, Rev. Dr. Jeffries and Mrs. Lillian Lighthipe (by proxy), of East Orange. The ceremony was made especially interesting by the appropriate remarks of the officiating clergyman, addressed to the child, parents and sponsors.

BOB HAMPTON of PLACER

By RANDALL PARRISH AUTHOR OF "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING" "MY LADY OF THE NORTH" "HISTORIC ILLINOIS," ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY A.C. McCLURG & CO.

"You told her how very foolish I act?"

"I told her how deeply interested I had become in your outspoken manner."

"Oh! And she exclaimed, 'How romantic!'"

"Possibly; she likewise took occasion to suggest that you were merely a child, and seemed astonished that I should have given you a second thought."

"Why, I am 18."

"I told her I believed you to be of that age, and she ignored my remark. But what truly surprised both of us was, how you happened to know my name."

The girl did not attempt to answer, and she was thankful enough that there was not sufficient light to betray the reddening of her cheeks.

"And you do not mean, even now, to make clear the mystery?" he asked.

"Not—now," she answered, almost timidly. "It is nothing much, only I would rather not now."

The sudden sound of voices and laughter in the street beneath brought them both to their feet.

"Why, they are coming across to supper," she exclaimed, in surprise. "How long we have been here, and it has seemed scarcely a moment! I shall certainly be in for a scolding, Lieut. Brant; and I fear your only means of saving me from being promptly sent home in disgrace will be to escort me in to supper."

"A delightful punishment!" He drew her hand through his arm, and said: "And then you will pledge me the first dance following?"

"Oh, you mustn't ask me. Really, I have not been on the floor to-night; I am not in the mood."

"Do you yield to moods?"

"Why, of course I do. Is it not a woman's privilege? If you know me long it will be to find me all moods."

"If they only prove as attractive as the particular one swaying you to-night, I shall certainly have no cause for complaint. Come, Miss Naida, please cultivate the mood to say yes before those others arrive."

She glanced up at him, shaking her dark hair, her lips smiling. "My present mood is certainly a good-natured one," she confessed, softly, "and consequently it is impossible to say no."

His hand pressed hers, as the thronging couples came merrily up the steps.

"Why, Naida, is this you, child? Where have you been all this time?" It was Miss Spencer, clinging to Mr. Wynkoop's arm.

"Merely sitting out a dance," was the seemingly indifferent answer; then she added sweetly, "Have you ever met my friend, Lieut. Brant, of the Seventh cavalry, Phoebe? We were just going in to supper."

Miss Spencer's glance swept over the silent young officer. "I believe I have had the honor. It was my privilege to be introduced to the gentleman by a mutual friend."

The inward rush of hungry guests swept them all forward in laughing, jostling confusion; but Naida's cheeks burned with indignation.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Reappearance of an Old Friend.

After supper the lieutenant and Naida danced twice together, the young girl's mood having apparently changed to one of buoyant, careless happiness, her dark eyes smiling, her lips uttering freely whatever thought came uppermost. Outwardly she pictured the gay and merry spirit of the night, yet to Brant, already observing her with the jealousy of a lover, she appeared distrait and restless, her affectation of abandon a mere mask to her feelings. Perhaps these things might have passed unnoted but for their contrast with the late confidential chat.

He could not reconcile this sudden change with what he believed of her. It was not carried out with the practiced art of one accustomed to deceit. There must be something real influencing her action. These misgivings burdened his mind even as he swung lightly with her to the music, and they talked together in little snatches.

The last two waltzes ended, they walked slowly through the scattering throng, he striving vainly to arouse her to the former independence and intimacy of speech. Suddenly they came face to face with Mrs. Herndon, and Brant felt the girl's arm twitch.

"I have been looking everywhere for you, Naida," Mrs. Herndon said, a slight complaint in her voice. "We were going home."

Naida's cheeks reddened painfully.

"I am so sorry if I have kept you waiting," her words spoken with a rush, "but—but, Lieut. Brant was intending to accompany me. We were just starting for the cloakroom."

"Oh, indeed!" Mrs. Herndon's expression was noncommittal, while her eyes surveyed the lieutenant.

"With your permission, of course," he said.

"I hardly think I have any need to interfere."

They separated, the younger people walking slowly, silently foward the door. He held her arm, assisting her to descend the stairway, his lips murmuring a few commonplaces, to which she scarcely returned even monosyllabic replies, although she frequently flashed shy glances at his grave face. Both realized that some explanation was forthcoming, yet neither was quite prepared to force the issue.

"I have no wraps at the hotel," she said, as he attempted to turn that way. "That was a lie also; let us walk directly down the road."

CLOSING OUT OF FORTY-FIVE PIANOS

Entire stock, including all fixtures. Fine high-grade, new pianos, piano players, player pianos, offered at one-third to one-half of, wholesale and less in some cases.

BIG SALE BEGINS AT 8.30 SHARP, SATURDAY

Extremely easy terms from $4 to $6 and $8 a month will be accepted. All marked in plain figures.

OPEN EVENINGS. 170 EAST FRONT STREET.

To the Public:

The following letter explains itself.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 29, 1907.

Mr. T. M. Griffith, Manager,
185 Market St., Newark, N. J.

Dear Sir:—After careful consideration, and owing to the tremendous increase in our wholesale trade, and the fact that our factory is unable to supply our orders, we have decided it is necessary to curtail our own retail branches, so that we can take care of the regular wholesale trade, until such time as we can largely increase our manufacturing facilities, which, as you know, takes several months.

For the immediate present, we must ask you to close up the Plainfield store, and to handle the business hereafter from the Newark branch. Please do this in any way you see fit, but do it promptly.

There are two methods open to you, one to box and ship the instruments away, which is expensive and unsatisfactory; the second, and far better way, is to close out this entire stock at retail to the piano buying public at greatly reduced prices, even at wholesale and less, leaving a friend for the house with every piano sold.

We suggest the latter method.

But one word more—this must be closed by the first of October.

Yours very truly,
HALLET & DAVIS PIANO CO.,
C. C. Conway, Treas.

The matter of how to do it was left to me, and I have decided to close out this entire stock at wholesale prices and less in many instances.

Better by far leave each one of these beautiful instruments in some homes in Plainfield to advertise, and make friends for us, than to re-ship. The loss in profit goes to you as a purchaser.

The news of this great sale—the opportunity of a life-time—cannot help but be of great interest to the many people who are contemplating the purchase of a piano. If you have been looking for a bargain in one of the good old high-class medium pianos, and have been putting the matter off on account of price, or for any other reason, you will have, during the next 10 days, the best opportunity ever presented to gratify your wishes and furnish the home and family with a good piano at a lower price and on easier terms than you ever dreamed of securing.

STOCK COMPRISES BEST MAKES.

At no time in my long business career have I been in a position to offer such a grand array of good pianos and organs and at such remarkable price reductions. The stock consists of such well-known makes as Hallet & Davis, Conway, Kimball, Bowen, Wellman, and others. Most of these pianos are new, some are slightly used.

ALL MARKED IN PLAIN FIGURES

Every instrument marked in plain figures and the tag on each instrument plainly indicates the great money-saving opportunity of this sale. One price everybody—the marked price.

Space will not permit a description of the many bargains. A visit of inspection and investigation is necessary to understand and fully appreciate what this sale means to you—the great money-saving possibilities, easy terms, etc., etc.

There are new upright pianos, worth in the regular way $225 to $300, marked to close at $117, $133 to $168.

TERMS: I am going to make the terms to suit my patrons at this sale. A little money down and $5, $10 and $15 per month will purchase most any piano in stock.

I offer quite a number of standard make pianos that are considered low in the regular way at $325, $350 and $375, in mahogany, English oak and walnut cases; most of them are new, some a little store worn. Sale prices, $170, $193 and $237. Terms, $10 to $20 down; $6 to $10 monthly.

Notwithstanding the prices I am quoting at this closing-out sale are based on cash cost, and much less in many instances, yet we will accept easy payments at the marked prices, the only difference between all cash and easy payments being a small interest rate on the deferred payments.

High-grade uprights of various makes, in fancy or plain Colonial cases. New pianos, worth regularly $400, $450, $500 and $600, to close at $243, $268, $295 to $367, and slightly upward for the very elaborate cases.

Terms on these at the rate of $15 to $30 down, $7 to 10 per month, will be accepted.

BARGAINS IN USED UPRIGHTS.

I have quite a number of used uprights of all makes that must go at this sale. You should see these bargains early, because they will go quickly.

OUT OF TOWN PEOPLE SHOULD CALL.

People can afford to come a long distance to attend this sale if an instrument is needed for the home.

If you can't call, write me at once for list of bargains, terms, etc. Will send pianos anywhere to be paid for on our easy payment plan.

SOME SQUARE PIANOS AND ORGANS TO GIVE AWAY.

I will give away a number of square pianos and organs, all I will charge for them is the cartage and the repairs put on them. I invite an early call from everybody, whether you are ready to purchase an instrument or not. This don't delay.

Open evenings until 9 o'clock.

GOLF.

Match play will begin tomorrow for the September Handicap cup at the South Orange Field Club. Twenty-four members have qualified for the opening event.

Francis Lee Stuart won the handicap of the Essex Fells Club this week with a net score of 82. In the club championship Jason Rogers beat A. L. Pierson, 1 up (20 holes); J. C. Sprigg beat Dr. Schroeder, 5 up and 4 to play; J. G. Phyfe beat R. S. Despard, 9 up and 7 to play; C. G. White beat William Greason, 1 up (19 holes).

The cup offered by J. Lawrence Davies for an eighteen-hole handicap medal play golf match at the Newport Golf Club, was won Wednesday by Alexander Morten, who had a net score of 74. His nearest competitor was Royal Phelps Carroll, with a 75.

Although the Metropolitan Golf Association will stand half the expenses this year, which are about $800, no club has offered its links for the open championship. The expenses are for prizes, score bulletins and printing, but although there was a circular sent out last winter no club has been found to stand half of the limited outlay. In 1905 and 1906 the Fox Hills and Hollywood clubs stood all the cost. In view of the sport provided and the opportunity the tournament gives to the assistants at the clubs it seems to deserve a better support. There are not many open dates left, so the club that wants the tournament should speak up quickly.

Saturday's competition at the Crescent A. C. links will be over an entirely new course. The eighteen-hole course of 4,562 yards has been changed by the golf committee and George Strath into a nine-hole course of 3,176 yards, with a bogey of 42. Thomas Hovenden run a record over the old course of 69. Although always regarded as an attempt through the limited ground to force a quart into a pint measure, the course has been the scene of many matches and competitions that have helped to make golf history, and some fine players hit their first ball on it. There was a sensational open tournament at the Crescent links in May, 1899, in which Findlay Douglas won the qualifying round prize with 74, but lost none in the semi-final to Amos Dwight on the nineteenth hole, who beat H. S. Bowns in the final.

The new nine-hole course is as fine a test of golf as any one need desire. The order of the holes is of 265, 481, 470, 424, 343, 346, 342, 252 and 253 yards. The double round gives eighteen holes of 6,352 yards, or 520 yards longer than two rounds at Dyker Meadow and 670 yards more than the Fox Hills course. The first hole will be the old first in its present condition, but as soon as the grading is done it will be lengthened nearly 100 yards. The second hole is played from the old fifth tee to the old eighth green, a distance of 481 yards, with a bogey of 5. The third hole is from the old ninth tee to the old sixth green, a distance of 470 yards, with a bogey of 5. The fourth hole is from a new tee at First avenue and Eighty-first street to the old twelfth green, a distance of 424 yards, with a bogey of 5. The fifth hole is from a new tee below the fourth green to the old tenth hole, a distance of 343 yards, with a bogey of 5. The sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth holes are the old fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth holes, respectively.

is assisted in entertaining the guests by a special committee, although every other Elk has resolved himself into a reception committee of one.

The feature of the affair is a base ball game between members of the local lodge and Somerville lodge, No. 1,068, of which Fred Wink is exalted ruler. Chester Cauley is captain of the visitors' aggregation, while William Townley is head of the Plainfield nine. Forty members of Somerville lodge are rooting for their team.

Among the visiting Elks expected are State Senator Joseph Frelinghuysen, of Raritan, and Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, of Westfield, both members of the Plainfield lodge.

MUNICIPALITY MUST CLEAN GREEN BROOK.

Not Up to the County, Says W. R. Coddington.

The much disputed question as to who is responsible for the unsanitary condition of Green brook and who shall clean it out, remains unsettled, but from present indications it will have to be undertaken by the officials of the city and borough through the Board of Health of each community. In a communication to the Union County Board of Freeholders, the North Plainfield Board of Health requested the county body to take such action as it deemed necessary, and the matter was referred to the county attorney and Plainfield members of the board.

The Union county freeholders, after a conference with County Attorney W. R. Codington, have decided that it is not their business to clean the brook, and they absolutely refuse to have anything to do with it. It is understood that the Somerset County Board of Freeholders has decided likewise.

The discussion of the matter has brought out the fact that there are a number of individuals whose land abuts on the brook on both sides, and they have certain rights in connection with the brook. If it is in an unsanitary condition at these points, it is said to be the duty of the city or borough to see that the property owners make it sanitary. In all other cases, it is the opinion that the city or borough must do the work at their own expense. According to the county attorney the authority of the freeholders extend only to the county line bridges, and not a foot outside of them. If the stream is unsanitary beneath these bridges it would then be the duty of the freeholders to remedy the trouble.

Owing to the small amount of rainfall this season the brook has had but little water in it and at times it has become very objectionable to residents in the vicinity. The Union county freeholders have communicated with the Borough Board of Health stating its position in the matter.

ACKERMAN HAS BEEN ON MANY RECORD TRIPS

CROSSED THE OCEAN FIFTY TIMES—IN PENNSYLVNANIA TODAY.

State Senator E. R. Ackerman, who arrived in New York from Europe yesterday, after a voyage on the record-smashing Lusitania, whose speedy trip across the ocean was chronicled in yesterday's Daily Press, reacehd his home in this city last night. He went to Pennsylvania today, to look over the cement works in which he is interested, but expects to return home tonight.

Mr. Ackerman was seen by a Daily Press man last night. He begged off from a political interview, because he had no fresh knowledge of the situation. He was kept busy abroad securing data as to capital punishment for the commission on which he is serving, and compiled a mass of information that the commission members may find useful.

Mr. Ackerman has made twenty-five round trips across the Atlantic and was on the Deutschland when she made her record run and on the Etruria and the New York when they were blue-ribbon winners of the sea. He especially praised the steadiness of the Lusitania.

"On Tuesday there was a bit of rough weather," he said, "but we only knew it because of a bulletin posted to that effect."

TROUBLES OF COURT HOUSE CONTRACTORS

LATEST HITCH INCREASES COST OF BUILDING'S ERECTION.

The Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders and the contractors, William H. Flasell & Co., of New York, are having trouble of their own with the erection of the new $200,000 white marble court house for Somerset county. Not only has the work on the big building been at a standstill because of labor troubles, but the structure promises to cost much more than the price originally contracted.

It has been found necessary to excavate deeper for the foundation than it was at first thought to be, and for trenches and a water main. The deeper excavations were found necessary to secure firmer ground on which to lay the foundations. The contractors were digging in a lot of rubbish when the depth stated in the specifications was reached. A big well was discovered and this had to be filled in. The back cellar for the structure was made a foot deeper than called for in the plans and the foundation built a foot higher.

The contract provides for the pay for all extra work of this nature, and the Board of Chosen Freeholders was obliged to order a bill of $2,300 paid for the outside work. The members of the board demanded a rigid explanation in reference to the extras, however, before they would sanction the payment of the bill.

An effort has been made to have former freeholder, William J. Logan, employed by the county as the representative of the board to constantly oversee the stone work in the construction of the new court house, but no definite action has been taken in the matter. Some of the members of the board cannot see their way clear to employ another overseer when the county is already paying the architect for performing this duty.

Warning for a Scold.

Accused of being a common scold, careless as to the quality of language she gushed, Mrs. Mary Ellick, of West Third street, was arraigned in the city court this morning on the complaint of several neighbors. Judge Runyon gave her a judicial scolding, to balance up accounts, and told her that if she called the neighbors names again he would send her to jail for sixty days. Mr. Ellick gasped, opened her mouth, and then decided that she couldn't trust her tongue before a man who could put one in jail.

Mr. and Mrs. Murphy Home.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Murphy, of Watchung avenue, returned home yesterday on the Celtic after a two and a half months' visit abroad. They left the other side about fifty hours ahead of the new Cunarder, Lusitania, and arrived in New York about four hours later. Last Wednesday the Lusitania overtook and passed the Celtic. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy had a delightful trip abroad and were greatly benefitted in health.

DEMOCRATS CITY MEETING

Minority Party Convention Has Been Called for Monday Night Oct. 14.

PLAN COMPLETE TICKET

W. L. Hetfield, Sr., for City Judge to Run Against W. N. Runyon—Marshall for Common Council.

Plainfield's Democrats will hold their city convention on Monday night, October 14, at a place not yet announced. They will put a full ticket in the field including a candidate for city judge to oppose William N. Runyon, who will be named by the Republicans unless the demands made by the labor vote are complied with. Union labor in Plainfield is antagonistic to Runyon, but the Republican leaders are bringing every influence to bear to kill the opposition to him. It is reliably reported, as stated some days ago exclusively in this paper that Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., chairman of the Democratic city committee will be the Democratic candidate for the judgeship.

Former Police Commissioner H. W. Marshall, it is said, will be one of the nominees for councilmen-at-large. Who the others will be is not known. Altogether three councilmen-at-large and four ward councilmen will be named. Good men, it is said, will be picked in every instance for the Democrats say that there is a possibility of landing one or more in office this year.

The Democratic party believes that there is a strong independent following in the city that will vote for minority representation in the Council. They argue that best government can only be attained when there is an opposition. For years, the body has ben solidly Republican. Now the Democrats say they are going to make a heroic attempt to break in on it.

POLICEMAN RISKS LIFE TO STOP A RUNAWAY.

Flynn Held On, Although the Animal Was Rushing Toward Show Window.

A nervy stop and a narrow escape marked a runaway on West Front street this morning. The rig was that of George Fatouros, a fruit dealer. Policeman Charles Flynn made the stop, and Joseph Angermauer, an aged street laborer, had the escape. The horse, a powerful young gray, that has a skittish temperament, started wildly down West Front street, just after turning from Park avenue, when loose breeching fell banging about its heels. It rushed into the thick of the Saturday morning crush of vehicles, threatening a smashup at every jump. Flynn, standing at the corner of Park avenue, rushed after it.

Fatouros, who was driving, sawed wildly on the reins, and the horse swung in toward the sidewalk. Almost in his way was Angerbauer, scraping the gutter. Flynn yelled a warning, and the old man barely leaped aside in time.

The horse came crashing up on the sidewalk, and headed straight for one of the plate glass windows in S. Scheuer & Co.'s grocery store. Flynn caught the bridle as the horse leaped on the walk, and hung on in spite of the rush toward the glass. He won the struggle, and pulled the horse down a few feet from the window. The only damage was to Flynn's white gloves. He'll have to buy a new pair.

SENATOR HILLERY FOR 2d TERM

Morris County Republicans Defy Anti-Saloon League.

The Morristown county Republican convention has nominated Senator Thomas J. Hillery for a second term. Surrogate David Young for a third term and Assemblyman Henry W. Buxton for a second term, and also named James W. Lyons, of Pompton Plains, as a candidate for the Assembly. The convention expressed its appreciation of the accomplishments of the Republican party under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt and in the State under Governor Edward C. Stokes.

County Chairman James H. McGraw in calling the convention to order alluded to the campaign being waged in this county against Assemblyman Buxton for his attitutde on the local option question. He said: "I have no sympathy for the attacks against Mr. Buxton. He did his duty in the Assembly and is entitled to your support, despite the attacks made by Superintendent Burke and other notoriety seekers."

ANTAGONISM TO AUTOS

In Approving Frelinghuysen's Views Ackerman Tells of Conditions Abroad.

SITUATION ALARMING

In Interesting Letter Union's Senator Reviews the European Feeling Toward Reckless Automobilists

His attention having been attracted to State Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen's recent warning to reckless automobilists as republished in a Paris edition of a New York paper, State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman of this city, who returned from abroad yesterday, has joined in the views expressed by the Somerset man, his vigorous expression of opinion on the subject being contained in a letter sent to the author of New Jersey's automobile law from Baie. It will be recalled that some six weeks ago, Senator Frelinghuysen suggested to J. B. R. Smith that as State custodian of the automobile licenses, he revoke forthwith for second offense the privileges of those who flagrantly violate the provisions of the law, and in the Daily Press Mr. Frelinghuysen ventured the assertion that unless reckless automobiling be stopped the time would not be far distant when the people would rise up and demand that such vehicles be denied the use of the public highways. Following out his suggestion, Mr. Smith has revoked the license of State Senator James P. McNichol, the Republican boss of Philadelphia, who has been found guilty of violating the speed provision.

In his letter to Mr. Frelinghuysen, Senator Ackerman says: "I wish to congratulate you upon the warning you have uttered which is both timely and absolutely necessary. There is a growing feeling in European countries against the automobile and I am surprised to see that even the French are growing restive under the arrogance displayed by those chafeurs who seem to think that the world was made for them alone and that if other people don't get off the earth the best way to put them off is to run over them. A few years ago the auto was encouraged as well as welcomed but now you see many signs of "automobiles" prohibited" even at such places as Baden-Baden and Ostend where one generally supposes everything runs "quite loose." In Switzerland no automobile can use the fine roads in the mountain passes except under rigorous conditions and in London steps are being taken to build a separate road for their use so as to lessen the record of fatalities with which the daily papers are crowded. In another direction is the automobile bus disliked and at a meeting of house-owners recently held in London, the statement was made that the advent of these machines had caused a loss to proprietors of $6,000,000, in the last year by reason of tenants vacating premises because of the multiplicity of these machines with constant danger to life. As you well know I am not a hater of the automobile but enjoy taking an occasional ride in one, but at a slow speed, therefore, my remarks as above, are not inspired with an idea to fan a flame of antagonism to the automobile owner but are given as facts which exist and which must be considered if autos at express train speed are longer to be tolerated on the public highways."

Senator Ackerman said last night when questioned about his statement, that the letter received by Senator Frelinghuysen fully expressed his views and he had nothing more to add.

Serious Charge Dismissed.

The charge brought by Alonzo Terry, of Greenbrook, against John Caulfield, accused by his daughter, Miss Henrietta Terry, 17 years old, was dismissed by Judge Runyon this morning, after a two-hour hearing. The evidence offered did not support the charge. The defense did not put on any witnesses. Francis J. Blatz and Harry C. Runyon conducted the defense. John Casey, Jr., accused of simple assault by the girl, has waived examination, and is under a $500 bond to appear before the grand jury.

Mrs. Frances Beach Martin.

Mrs. Frances Beach Martin, aged 80 years, widow of L. L. Martin, died yesterday at her home in the Jackson building on Madison avenue, following a stroke of paralysis recently. She had been a resident of Plainfield for many years. She was a member of the First Presbyterian church, and a regular attendant there when her health would permit. A son, F. H. Martin, of this city, and a daughter, Mrs. Leggett, wife of Rev. Lester Leggett, survive. The funeral service will be held from the late residence Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

WALTER SCOTT IS DYING

His Physician Believes Great Printing Press Inventor will Not Live Day Out.

A BIG MANUFACTURER

Owner of Scott Press Works—One of the Largest Patentees in the World—His Career.

Walter Scott, a world renowned inventor and builder of printing presses and appliances, is dying at his home in East Front street. His physician, Dr. B. VanD. Hedges and the family do not believe that he will survive until nightfall. He was striken with apoplexy some months ago and has since been confined to his house, his business being conducted by his two sons.

Mr. Scot was born in Scotland on May 22, 1844. He was educated at Ayr Academy, in Scotland, where he studied theoretical and applied mechanics and machine designing. In 1869 he visited the principal cities in the United States and settled in Chicago. In 1884 he came to this city and built the extensive plant at South avenue and Richmond streets, where he has since manufactured printing presses and appliances. More than 500 skilled men are employed in this plant.

Mr. Scott has a national reputation as an inventor and builder of printing and folding machinery. He commenced to construct and improve such machines in 1874, and in 1875 he took out his first patents. His inventions followed so rapidly that the commissioner of patents in a recent report mentioned him as one of thirty-nine inventors who had been granted each year in twenty-six years. He has obtained more patents than any other individual or concern in his line of business.

His inventions have not been confined to a few kinds of machines. They cover the whole range of printing machinery, stereotype, electrotype and other machinery connected with printing.

The wife and two sons, David and Walter Scott, are at the bedside of the dying man.

DEMOCRATS PLATFORM.

Chairman Hudspeth Mentions the Probable Planks.

Robert S. Hudspeth, chairman of the State Democratic committee, gave out today a carefully prepared statement in which he forecasts the platform which will be adopted by the State convention on September 17.

His itemization of the planks in the platform reads much like the declaration of the New Idea principles as embodied in the Essex county Republican platform yesterday. It includes equal taxation, regulation of public utilities, limited franchises and their taxation, direct vote for United States Senator, anti-monopoly law, anti-bribery law, primary recount law, and home rule.

HOME FROM ABROAD.

Two Pastors Return From European Trip.

EAGLES WILL HOLD FIRST BIG CLAMBAKE

WILL "FLY" TO SCOTT TERRY'S GROVE TOMORROW.

Plainfield Aerie, No. 866, Fraternal Order of Eagles, will hold its first annual clambake at Scott Terry's grove, at Alton, tomorrow, and it promises to be the best bake given in this section for some time. Morris, the well known "bake" man, of Perth Amboy, will have charge and see that every guest is served plentifully and promptly. Stages will meet trolley at Netherwood station every half hour from 11 a. m. until 2 p. m. and convey the "birds" and their friends to the grove.

There will be all kinds of amusements and games. Quoits will be provided and there will also be a ball game between the married and single men of the Eagles. The bake will be served promptly at 3 o'clock, and the number of tickets has been limited to 200, most of which have been disposed of.

CAMPBELL'S NOTION OF IDENTIFYING RINGS

THOUGH IT COULDN'T BE DONE WITHOUT NAME IN CIRCLET.

Charles Campbell knows more about the identification of lost jewelry now than he did before he came out of his cell at the station house to face Judge Runyon on a charge of stealing preferred by George Ruggles. Charles and George are both colored. George lost a gold ring, and a white man named Huff found it. He gave it to Campbell, and Charles hung it on his watch chain. Ruggles saw it and claimed it Wednesday morning.

Campbell pooh-poohed the claim, and told George to brush by. Then he sold the ring to John Smith, who works at the Cab Company stables.

"What do you mean by retaining a ring that had been identified by the legal owner?" Judge Runyon asked Campbell sternly.

Campbell sniffed "Identify?" he queried. "He ain't identify that ring. How could 'e? Ain't no name in that ring."

Campbell looked blank when the magistrate told him that the law recognized about 300 ways of identifying a ring.

"You've got yourself in the way of serious trouble," said the judge. "It will get you if you don't recover the ring."

Campbell said he thought he could get it, and the case was laid over until Monday morning to give him an opportunity to produce it in court.

THOUSAND ATTEND CONCERT.

Attractive Vocal and Instrumental Program Enjoyed.

More than a thousand people gathered on East Front street, opposite the Woodhull & Martin building, last night, and enjoyed the band concert, arranged by Benjamin La Vere. The program comprised all the latest selections and a feature was the singing by William Redmond and Eddie Weston. The new popular song, "Since Arrah Wanna Married Barney Carney," was one of the hits of the evening, and the vocalists were recalled several times.

The band music was excellent, and judging by the enthusiasm shown by the crowd, it was enjoyed. The crowd was somewhat inconvenienced by the location of the band stand, as it was directly on Front street, where trolley cars were passing every fifteen minutes.

Edwin Wright, aged 70 years, died at his home in Fanwood borough at 5 o'clock this morning, following a hemorrhage of the bowels, which came on suddenly. Prior to this illness he was able to be about and enjoyed excellent health. Mr. Wright was born in New York, and is about the last member of a family of Friends prominent in New York for many years. During his fifteen years' residence at Fanwood he was engaged as general overseer of the Warren Ackerman estate, and besides was interested in the insurance business. DELEGATES ENGAGE TRAIN

Union County Democrats Charter a Special for State Convention, Tuesday.

MARTINE BADGES OUT

Union County Committ Makes Plans for Demonstration—Claim Victory on Second Ballot.

"Farmer-orator" James E. Martine's friends are laying plans for a big demonstration at Trenton on Tuesday when the Democratic State convention meets to nominate a gubernatorial candidate, arrangements having been completed last night at a meeting of the party's county committee at Elizabeth for a special train over the Reading to carry the Martine boomers to the State capitol. The train will pll out of Elizabeth at 8:45 Tuesday morning and will make stops all along the line to pick up delegations carrying the farmer-orator's banner. Brigadier General D. F. Collins, the county chairman, last night approved of the handsome badges bearing Martine's portraits, which will be freely distributed among the shouters. There was some talk of desirable planks for the party's platform, and it appeared to be the general opinion that those already suggested by the Plainfield stalwart were most needful. They include limited franchises, franchise tax, public utilities commission elected by the people, initiative and referendum, popular election of United States Senator, an economical administration and a thorough house-cleaning at Trenton.

Frank S. Katzenbach
Most Formidable Candidate for Democratic Gubernatorial Nomination.

A committee comprising General Dennis J. Collins, Charles Moore, J. J. Lane, Mulford Scudder and W. G. Coats was appointed to go to Trenton the night before the convention and get James E. Martine's boom well under way. It was announced that the State convention will be opened with prayer by Rev. Otis A. Glazebrook, rector of Christ church, Elizabeth, and chaplain of the Second Regiment, National Guard of New Jersey.

It was the opinion that if the men mentioned for the Assembly nomination are successful, the party will have the strongest ticket in years. The prospective Assembly nominees are Charles R. Muller, a prominent German-American from Elizabeth; William E. Tuttle, of Westfield, and Fred C. Hyer, of Rahway. Le Roy Gibby, of Summit, is mentioned as the candidate for surrogate.

Martine's managers do not claim that they will stampede the convention on the first ballot, but declare that there is no doubt of his nomination if the first ballot is a deadlock, which they claim it will be. Former Mayor William L. Saunders, of North Plainfield, is hurrying East from Denver to use Martine arguments on the Somerset county delegation, of which he is a member. The Martine people will not tell where their strength lies, but say that there will be some surprises on Tuesday. They are not saying a word against either Bob Davis or Jim Smith, and for the reason the wise ones say read between the lines of papers friendly to those two political masters.

They point to the fact that the apparently strongest candidate on the surface, Mayor Frank Katzenbach, of Trenton, has stubbornly declined to give his views on current questions while their favorite is as outspoken as he ever was. When Katzenbach is asked where he stands, he replies by telling a funny story. Martine's friends declare they will demand on Tuesday that the Trenton man's friends come out in the open with his platform.

AMUSEMENTS.

Proctor's Elizabeth theatre next week will present the well known Broadway favorite, Virginia Earl. Playgoers will remember her for her clever work in "Sergeant Kitty" and "Around New York." Miss Earl has chosen a worthy vehicle, especially written for her by that past master of short sketches, "Will M. Cressy." The skit has a musical tinge and tells of the amusing situation arising from a young lady getting into the wrong apartments at midnight. The title "A Midnight Mistake," is well taken, for the many ludicrous subterfuges employed by the young lady (Miss Earl) are witty, clever and timely.

Another wonderful engagement will be that of the Kitu Banzai Troupe, the flowers of the Mikado's kingdom in the way of equilibrists, acrobats and jugglers.

A duo of musical comedians of more than ordinary ability are Swift and Buckley, who play various musical instruments in an entertaining manner.

From the birthplace of humor comes Arthur Whitelaw, the Celtic humorist, with a monologue brim full of new songs and sayings that would tickle the risibilities of even a laughless man.

To the mystery loving public is offered the act presented by Signor Chefalo and the petite Capretta, aptly termed the "Wizards in White," who present a series of feats in legerdemain which places them in the front rank of necromancers of the vaudeville world of today.

Miss Abbie VanCleef, of West End avenue, who has been enjoying a two weeks' vacation with out-of-town relatives, is expected to return home tomorrow.

Baseball and General Sports

DIAMOND DUST.

Toronto is the winner of the Eastern League pennant this season with eighty victories, forty-three defeats and a percentage of .650. Buffalo is in second place with a percentage of .583. Newark now heads the second division with a percentage of .496.

In the few games pitched by Lou Wiltse for the Newark Eastern League team, he has shown good form and an ability to hold his own. He confidently believes that next season will find him among the leaders in the pitching department.

Clinton Avenue will play Perth Amboy at the latter place today, and will not meet the Westfields on Crescent Oval as announced recently.

There is still anxiety among the fans to know when the Clinton Avenues are going to play the West Ends, of Somerville. Manager Dorflinger is urged to get busy while the weather is good.

"Billy" Gilbert, who is playing second base for the Trenton Tri-State team, has satisfied his indebtedness to the national commission and is considered in good standing.

Despite the fact that several teams have been playing good ball in Elizabeth this season, it is said that from a financial point of view the season has not been a success. The Stars are said to be the only team that has made money, and that has been due to the Sunday games.

The Elizabeth Y. M. C. A. team will play the Elizabeth Atlantic League team at the county seat today. This will be the last meeting of these teams this season.

From all accounts there is likely to be many changes in the Atlantic League next season. There appears to be some doubt as to whether Elizabeth will continue, and the officers are trying to place a team in Wilmington. The Pennsylvania clubs are about the only ones that have made money, especially Reading, the winner of the pennant.

It is doubtful whether Frank Burke will manage the Elizabethport Stars next season. The indications are that the club will not have as easy a time securing big league attractions in the future, owing to the opposition on the part of Manager Burnham, of Newark. The only reason he refrained from protesting this year was his desire to put the Atlantic League team down and out.

GOLF.

The events at the Plainfield Country Club today will include the weekly competitions for the Golf Committee and Green Committee cups, and the play for the Autumn cups, qualifying rounds for match play in October.

A match of considerable interest was played at the Plainfield Country Club Wednesday between Will T. Glenney, of the local club and E. M. Wild, of Cranford. Glenney was defeated in the morning round, but won out in the afternoon. Wild made a 76 in the morning, his best score since he has been playing the game.

There will be play for the President's, Golf Club and September cups at the Park club today. As these competitions gradually draw to a close the interest increases. There are but a few points' difference among the leaders. Charles B. Morse holds the lead for the President's and Golf Club cups.

Dudley H. Barrows is busy these days playing the game at the Plainfield Country Club, prior to returning to Princeton to resume his studies. He is one of the strongest members of the college golf team.

There has been a noticeable absence of team matches at the Plainfield Country Club, this season, much to the regret of many members. These matches tend to stimulate an interest in the game as nothing else will do, besides it helps the members to get acquainted and sociability is promoted.

It is seldom that the course has continued to be in such fine condition as it has this season. Leighton Calkins, chairman of the green committee, has spent an unusual amount of time improving the course and installing extra hazards. Quantities of sand have been used at different points and the regular greens has made it much more difficult to return a low score than formerly.

Social functions are increasing at the Plainfield Country Club as the members return from their summer outing. Luncheons and dinners are now a feature of the club life and the weekly dinner-dance on Saturday attracts a large number, especially among the younger set.

FOOTBALL.

Yale, the second football team of the Big Six to practice, will start its preliminary work today. W. F. Knox, the new field coach; Capt. J. V. Foster, and fifteen candidates will assemble to start the first work of the season. Today the work will be more in the nature of roll call than anything else, but on Monday the real work of the football season will commence. In spite of the fact that a comparatively large number of varsity men were lost last year by graduation, the prospects for a winning aggregation at New Haven have seldom been brighter. There are enough old men left to form a nucleus for a new team, and the new candidates are expected to bring forward material which will put the team of 1907 well up in the list of Yale elevens.

It was said last year when the season closed that the freshman team, of last year was capable of furnishing almost a whole varsity eleven. Last year's freshmen aggregation was probably the fastest fire year team in the country and, was said to be the best that had been seen in New Haven in many years. It was the only team in the country that went through the season without being scored against.

It was heavy and exceedingly fast and was said to have mastered the intricacies of the new rules and the forward pass better than any other team in the country. It is not yet certain how many of last year's freshman players will report for work this fall, but it is believed that the majority of them will report for duty at the beginning of the season.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

"Patsy In Politics" has been chosen as the title for the vehicle in which Billy B. Van will star this season. Under the management of the P. H. Sullivan Amusement Company this farcical actor of ability comes to the New Plainfield September 19.

John Griffith is coming here on September 18 to play Shakespeare's tragedy, "King Richard the Third." On the occasion of his coming visit his manager promises the support of a most excellent company, with brilliant scenic and costume equipment.

The attraction at the New Plainfield next Saturday will be a production entitled "Happyland," a two-act comic opera, prepared expressly for the peculiar histrionic capabilities of De Wolf Hopper. Hopper's last appearance will long be recalled as one of the bright playhouse events of the season. He comes to us now, we are told, still in the humorous character of a troubled regent.

"Flotsam," the character that Adelaide Thurston takes in her play, "The Girl From Out Yonder," has a pet that is probably unique. It is nothing less than a turtle which she carries around in her pocket and to which she talks very much as one would to a dog or a horse.

In "The Lion and the Mouse," which Henry B. Harris will present here at the New Plainfield Monday, September 16, Charles Klein, the author, has written a play that promises to be of enduring popularity. Indeed, it may be said that the success already achieved by this drama is beyond anything known in America in the past ten years.

"Red Feather," the romantic comic opera in two acts, by Reginald De Koven, with libretto by Charles Klein, of "Music Master" and "Lion and the Mouse" fame, and lyrics by Charles Emerson Cook, will be presented at the theatre tonight.

Wouldn't Speak to Her "In Heaven."

Camden, Sept. 14.—When Mrs. Bettie Shafer was arraigned before Recorder Stackhouse Thursday on a charge of disorderly conduct, preferred by Mrs. Mary Reed, the Recorder said: "Now, you two women kiss and make up." "Me make up with that woman," said Mrs. Shafer, "Why I wouldn't speak to that woman if I met her in heaven!" The complaint was dismissed.

THE RECKLESS AUTOMOBILIST.

In another column will be found a most interesting letter addressed to State Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, of Somerset county, by Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, of Union, who just returned from a ten weeks' mission abroad in the interest of the Senate committee appointed to investigate the subject of capital punishment. The subject with which Mr. Ackerman deals is the growing feeling in England and on the continent against the automobile, for which reckless chauffeurs are undoubtedly responsible.

It will be recalled that recently the Strong Man from Somerset sounded a note of warning through the columns of The Daily Press to the lerag class of irresponsible chauffeurs in New Jersey. In that connection he suggested to State Motor Commissioner J. B. R. Smith that he revoke licenses of those twice found guilty of violating the admirable auto law, of which Mr. Frelinghuysen is the author. This request, which has been most admirably complied with by the State authorities, followed closely a fatality in Bernards township, due to reckless driving, occurring just when such accidents were filling the columns of the public prints.

Senator Frelinghuysen stated that in his opinion unless the automobilists generally should respect the laws, the time would not be far distant when their vehicles would be banished from the highways by an outraged public. He pointed out that the feeling against automobilists was constantly growing and that it was due solely to their own utter disregard of the mandate of the State. Following out this line of thought, Senator Ackerman in this paper today tells of the growing antagonism in other lands to the automobilist. It is a most instructive letter, and will prove interesting to those who have given any attention to the subject.

THE EXIT OF PERKINS.

Although it has a well established reputation of dealing editorially with political topics of Union county in a broad, common sense and accurate fashion, no better handling of a subject has ever been given by the Newark Evening News than that displayed in its treatment of Assemblyman Perkins' candidacy as contained in its editorial columns last night. The Newark paper shows how thoroughly in touch it is with Union county's affairs when it says:

"The political decapitation of Assemblyman Randolph Perkins was accomplished at Elizabeth yesterday, when the Republican County Convention by a vote of 112 to 29 refused to place him on the ticket for the fourth time, and named Carlton Pierce in his place.

There is little sympathy to be wasted on Mr. Perkins. A man of undoubted abilities, mentally one of the brightest members of the Assembly and far and away the strongest man of the Union County contingent, he chose the part of a political henchman rather than that of a statesman and has suffered the consequences. Even the inexplicable support some of the "new idea" men of Plainfield, whose inveterate foe he was in the Legislature, could not save him from a four to one defeat.

Mr. Perkins was warned that he would be defeated. He was told in advance that public sentiment was against him, that the Republican leaders did not want him, that he had already served three terms and was not deserving of or entitled to a fourth, that his record was extremely distasteful to local option advocates and to the majority of the "new idea" Republicans. But he decided to make the fight, and it is well that he did.

The one thing that stands out in Mr. Perkins' favor is his refusal to vote for the re-election of John F. Dryden to the United States Senate. The only question is whether he did this in obedience to the pronounced anti-Dryden sentiment of the people of Union county or in response to Charles N. Codding, who acted for the State house ring in that emergency. The fact that Codding was the man choesn to put Perkins in nomination before yesterday's convention seems to throw a strong sidelight on this question.

Be this as it may, it was definitely settled in Union county that voting against Dryden is not of itself sufficient to establish a perpetual claim to a seat in the Legislature, particularly when the claimant is obnoxious upon nearly all other grounds. His anti-Dryden vote seems to have been accepted by Judge Runyon and a few others of the "new idea" advocates as an assurance of his interest in reform, but the majority of the Colbyites in Union county could not forget that practically every other act of Perkins' was savagely inimical to their cause.

He was a regular of regulars, a machine man among machine men, yet his conduct in the Legislature lost him the support of the regulars and gained him the opposition of the organization, the antagonism of the "new idea" faction and the contempt of the local optimists. "He has been called a fighter, but the fight he put up for renomination was weak, indiscreet, evasive and shifty. In not one of his public efforts did he meet his opponents manfully and fairly and explain his record satisfactorily to his constituents. The more he said, the worse he appeared.

No man ever elected to the Legislature from Union county has had a better chance to rise to heights of public eminence, usefulness and popularity, and no one having such qualifications as Perkins possesses has failed more completely to take advantage of his opportunities. He has had his day. He has passed from the arena. Peace to his political ashes."

"CENTRAL PARK"

Was—Is—Will Be

IT WAS, only about a year ago, just a pretty farm.

IT IS to day the finest building site in Plainfield, with broad avenues macadamized their entire width, concrete curb, sidewalks, trees, gas, electric light, in fact all improvements. Nearly $100,000 expended in new and handsome dwellings, now ready for the market.

WHAT IT WILL BE we hardly dare predict, with contracts out for even more extensive improvements and twelve more handsome residences.

Central Park is that beautifully situated tract bounded by Park, Prospect, Hillside and Thornton Avenues.

Lots selling rapidly—Prices very low—Great investment or speculative opportunities.

VETERAN RAILROADERS ON AN ANNUAL OUTING

SOME PLAINFIELDERS AMONG JERSEY CENTRAL'S GUESTS.

The Veteran Employes' Association of the New Jersey Central is enjoying its annual outing today at Pleasure Bay and the officials of the company are doing all in their power to make the occasion a delightful one for the members. Vice-President and General Manager W. G. Besler, of this city, is among those who have taken the day off to spend the time with the old-time employes and the entertainment of the company by the veterans is complete in every detail.

Station Agent Joseph A. Haynes, Charles Schermerhorn, manager of the local Western Union office; Jacob Wagner, assistant baggagemaster at the North Avenue Station, and John Rowland, one of the employes in the local freight department, are among the veterans from this city attending the outing.

A sumptuous dinner was provided by the company. At the feast there were speeches by Mr. Besler and other officials of the company, and also members of the association. The kind expressions showing the harmonious feeling existing between the company and the employees were evidenced in very spech.

RARITAN.

Misses Anna Supper and Anna Waltz have returned to Brooklyn, after a week's visit here to Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Hipp.

Mrs. Ada Van Syckle and daughters, of Manasquan, have been guests this week of Mr. and Mrs. George Wortman.

FOOTBALL.

Lafayette started practice yesterday. There are six men from last year's varsity in college this year and there is a lot of good new material which can be drawn on to fill the vacancies. McAvoy, who was elected captain for this season, has decided not to return to college, and Vierberger, the big guard of last year's team, has suddenly decided to go to Washington and Jefferson this season. His loss and that of McAvoy will be keenly felt. Kirkpatrick, who was put out of the game early last season by an injured leg, will be back in the game this fall. The other varsity men who reported for practice are Chambers, Blaicher, Rogers, Hogan, Flad and Norris.

Besides these, Bride and Page, guards; Dines and T. Jones of last year's back field and Alcott and H. Jones, ends, are expected to report today.

The football authorities of the Western University of Pennsylvania are vastly pleased with the addition of Doc Van Doren to the football squad. Van Doren, who plays tackle is a giant in size, standing over six feet and weighing 215 pounds. He played on the W. U. P. team before graduating, and though now in active practice as an osteopath in Pittsburg, he is eligible to play on the team, as he is taking a post-graduate course at the university.

—The work of laying concrete sidewalks under the Park and Watchung avenue railroad bridges, was started yesterday by the bridge gang of the New Jersey Central.

STORIES OF THE SECRET SERVICE

BY CAPTAIN PATRICK D. TYRRELL.

STORY No. 4

The Biebush Band

Being an Account of the Capture and Conviction of That Notorious Band of Counterfeiters of Which Fred Biebush Was the Leader.

[Copyright, 1905, by Marion G. Scheitlin.]

Rev. Andrew Jackson Thomas had delivered a strong sermon at the Morgan street Methodist church in St. Louis, and at its close extended an earnest invitation for sinners to come to the "mourners' bench," seek Divine forgiveness and forsake the errors of their past lives. In the good old-fashioned Methodist way Rev. Mr. Thomas left the pulpit at the close of the sermon and, in a fine barytone voice, took the lead in the ringing song of invitation to the unrepentant. The lines of the hymn as he sang them were frequently punctuated with short impassioned appeals to those who were not known as church members. Then, to render his appeals more direct and personal, the minister started down the aisle, shaking hands with the "unprofessed," speaking an earnest word to this one and that one as he went.

Rev. Mr. Thomas was the type of minister familiarly known as the revivalist. He was about 45 years old, almost six feet tall, of robust physique. His hair and beard were brown, and his eye open and fearless. He was a vigorous and magnetic, if not polished speaker, a fine singer, a good "mixer" among all classes and apparently imbued with a sincere desire to bring sinners to repentance. He had not been in St. Louis long at the time of which I am writing, 26 years ago, but during his residence there, by his devotion to his ministerial labors, had endeared himself to the little flock of

PASSED IT QUICKLY TO HIS COMPANION.

Christian men and women worshiping in the church at Morgan and Ttwenty-fourth streets.

While he was passing among the sinners in his congregation the night on which I introduce Rev. Mr. Thomas to my readers he stopped at a pew well toward the rear of the church. The visitor was a plainly dressed man of middle age, evidently a workingman. The minister spoke a few words to him, still grasping his hand, and there was some response by the visitor. The singing was in progress and the conversation held in undertones, so that the words passed between the two were not distinguishable by those near. The incident was no different, to all appearances, from a score of others in the church that night when the minister importuned the wayward to repent.

The church services ended, Rev. Mr. Thomas left the building with several members of the congregation, chatting of religious matters, until their homeward paths diverged.

No attention had been paid the visitor at the church after the minister apparently had failed in inducing him to come to the "mourners' bench," but he had left before the services closed and had taken a rapid westerly course. As soon as the pastor separated from the members of his flock he walked well out of their sight and hearing in a leisurely way and then suddenly adopted a quick, business-like gait. Walking rapidly west to Grand avenue, he turned north. His home was in Finney avenue, west of Grand avenue, and near the intersection of these thoroughfares the "Rock" church, an imposing Catholic edifice, loomed blackly in the night, casting deep shadows over the sidewalk on the east side of Grand avenue. As he approached this point Rev. Mr. Thomas slackened his pace and became alert, peering ahead into the shadows as though looking for some one. He was not disappointed. From the opposite direction, timing his pace so that he would meet the minister in the deepest shadows of the church, emerged the man who had occupied the rear pew at the evening church service. There were no other pedestrians in sight.

"Hello, Harry," said the minister in a low tone, halting.

"Hello, Andy," responded the other, swinging about and falling into the preacher's stride.

Glancing furtively around him, Rev. Mr. Thomas thrust his hand under the skirt of his ministerial coat and, drawing forth a small, heavy package, passed it quickly to his companion. "Harry" pocketed it as quickly as it had been passed to him.

"When'll I see you again?" asked the receiver of the package.

"I can't say now; be at the church in a few nights," replied the minister.

All this had transpired in less time than it took to cross Grand avenue. On the other side there was a low-spoken good night, the minister turned into Finney avenue and his companion continued in the main thoroughfare. An hour later he was in his small room in North Sixth street. The minister went direct to his home and let himself in with a latch key.

No band of dealers in "coney" or counterfeit money ever gave the United States secret service more trouble than did the "Biebush gang," that operated in and from St. Louis for more than 25 years. In fact, long before there was such a government institution as the secret service division of the treasury department the name of Biebush was a proud one in criminal circles. It had been carried to distinction in the annals of crime by Frederick Biebush, who was born in Prussia in 1823 and emigrated to this country when he was 21 years old. Prior to his arrival in America nothing is known of him, but his history since is a romance of crime. His whole life was devoted to crime as a chosen profession, and his principal pursuit had been the exacting one of a wholesale dealer in counterfeit money. In this business he had gained the soubriquet of the "great southwest koniacker."

The readers of this narrative who read my recent account of the events leading up to the attempt to steal the body of Abraham Lincoln will recall that I then made clear the different hands through which counterfeit money passes before it reaches the public. The engraver, printer, dealer, shover and boodle carrier each has his distinct function to perform in the process of robbing the people. The dealer is the circulator, and, if he has suitable plates or dies, can flood the country with counterfeit money long after every engraver or die cutter in the business is behind prison bars.

To the business of dealing in "coney" Biebush had devoted his time and genius, yet he found leisure to act as a receiver of stolen goods, and was the patron and financial backer of thieves and burglars. He furnished the engravers of counterfeit plates with capital, helped produce the plates, bought plates, bought presses, ink and paper, and then found trustworthy men to act as his agents in the circulation of the spurious currency. For 30 years he had followed his chosen calling with unequaled success, his bold and profitable operations extending from Illinois to Texas.

Within a year of his arrival in the United States Fred iBebush began his criminal career. He was then a broad-shouldered man of fine physical appearance. The year 1850 found him keeping a saloon called the War Eagle, after a famous steamboat of antebellum days, in Third street, St. Louis. His place was frequented by river men of the better class, for he was a jovial chap and a good business man as well. I am not familiar with the way in which suspicion first attached to him. but one day the St. Louis police raided his saloon, and, buried in the walls, they found an immense lot of stolen silverware, plate and jewelry. There is said to have been found a good-sized sack of watches. He was arrested, but escaped punishment. At this time his permanent headquarters were established in St. Louis, but his agents worked throughout the entire Mississippi valley. Personally he dealt at wholesale only, negotiating with extreme caution and keenness of discernment for the sale of very large quantities of his wares.

In Missouri at that time there was a state law which provided that the testimony of no man who had served a penitentiary term was admissible in the courts of the state. Fred Biebush was familiar with this provision and followed one rule—as immutable in his business as the laws of the Medes and Persians—never to deal directly with any man who could not prove he had been a convict. And he went even further toward the extreme of caution, for while he would negotiate in person for the sale of counterfeit money with an ex-convict and would receive from such a one the honest money in payment for the bogus currency, he would invariably deliver the "coney" through the hands of a third party. So far as I know there is no man who can say he ever received "coney" from Fred Biebush except his time-tested personal agents. His rule against doing business with any ex-convicts was the thing that rendered it practically impossible to convict him. Besides observing the precautions mentioned, he usually succeeded in bringing his subordinates under his power so that his safety was theirs. For 25 years he pursued his criminal career unpunished.

Before the present system of national banks was established Biebush flourished wonderfully in his operations in the counterfeits of the bills of the old state banks. He did no manufacturing in those days, but from his headquarters in St. Louis he jobbed the "coney" in enormous quantities all over the country through such distinguished dealers as Nelson Driggs, Louis Sleight and others, the amount of representative dollars running into the hundreds of thousands. In this way he accumulated a large fortune. Then he went into the manufacturing business himself.

Not being an engraver nor a printer, he had to hire these artisans, and soon formed a partnership with John Peter McCartney, for whom he had formerly been an agent. McCartney was an engraver of high rank and the new criminal team was a strong one. McCartney did the engraving and Biebush superintended the printing and circulating. Later he acquired plates engraved by such high-class cutters as Benjamin Boyd and William Shelley. His fortune grew by tremendous leaps. He was arrested 50 times in all; but the early arrests never resulted in conviction for two reasons—his caution with whom he dealt and his wealth.

Many times he was arrested undoubtedly so that the officers making the arrest could "bleed" him. Never was a malefactor more adroit in the use of money with public officers, police and court officers than Fred Biebush. One of his favorite methods of escaping conviction was to "railroad" the state's witness out of the way by use of money or his secret power over them. After one arrest there was found in his possession letters from different members of the secret service offering to stand by him and help him out of trouble, of course for a consideration. I am glad to say that such operatives in the service rapidly grew fewer.

His wealth and power were also indicated by the finding in his possession at another time of notes for an aggregate amount of $60,000, signed by prominent citizens of St. Louis. He could command the most powerful politicians and state officers.

At the end of the civil war Col. H. C. Whitley was appointed in charge of the newly organized secret service and determined to bring such criminals as Fred Biebush, "Pete" McCartney, John Hart, "Bill" Burney, Thomas Hale and other notorious counterfeiters to justice. Operative John Eagan was put in charge of the St. Louis district, and, after much work, arrested Biebush for selling counterfeit money. Eagan pushed the case with a vigor unknown to Biebush, forced the prisoner to early trial, and succeeded in having him sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. The wily old German stayed behind the bars exactly one-half that many months, when he returned to St. Louis and resumed operations.

Under the direction of Col. Whitley a "stool pigeon" named McCabe was sent to Biebush and succeeded in paying him marked money for "coney." Biebush was arrested again in 1869, released on bail, and brought to trial. He had, as usual, "fixed" the government's witnesses and thought he was again to escape. In the meantime, however, William Shelley had been caught in the act of engraving a plate. The secret service learned that he had recently come from St. Louis, where he had made some plates for Biebush. Shelley was induced to return to St. Louis and tell his story in court. When Biebush appeared in court he was suddenly brought face to face with Shelley, and his bravado failed him for the first time. He escaped from the court room, forfeiting $20,000 bail, and disappeared.

Secret service operatives were put on his trail. A close watch was kept on the movements of Mrs. Biebush, who, in a day or so was traced to Cabaret island, opposite the town of Venice, in the Mississippi river. There she met her husband in a corn field. Biebush retiring to a hut in which he had taken shelter. The hut was surrounded and several shots fired to frighten the fugitive out. The shots were returned by the counterfeiter. Then the hut was fired. Biebush rushed out and made a mad dash for liberty, but was caught at a high fence, and, after being manacled, taken back to St. Louis. Once more he was tried, and in December, 1870, he was sentenced to 15 years in the Missouri penitentiary.

He served five years and was again pardoned, returning to St. Louis to resume not only his old calling, but to set up as a dealer in high-class burglars' tools. John Eagan had retired from the secret service to private life and I was transferrd to the St. Louis district from Chicago to manage the pursuit of Biebush.

Here, then, was not a mysterious crime, the perpetrator of which was unknown, as I suppose should be the case in all well ordered detective stories, but the task of fastening guilt on a man who had had a criminal reputation for more than a third of a century, been arrested 49 times and, profiting by the lesson of the past, was following his vocation with greater caution than he had exercised before.

When I took up the effort to put "Old Fred" Biebush where he could make the government no more trouble he was busy circulating brass, silver-plated coins in denominations of 25 and 50 cent pieces and dollars. These coins could not be classed as clever counterfeits, presenting an almost perfect appearance, but being noticeably light in weight. He was also circulating the spurious $20 United States treasury note engraved by "Pete" McCartney and the bills known as the Richmond tens. The former was a perfect piece of work.

The Richmond bills were made from a "skeleton" plate in which the name of the bank was left blank. Other plates were then used in connection with it on which nothing was engraved but the names of the Richmond, Muncie and Lafayette, Ind., banks. An issue of bills was struck from the principal plate. Part of this issue would be run through the press on one of the other plates, thus filling in the name of the bank desired. And here I may say that the engraver of the Richmond plate was never found, so far as I know, nor his identity ascertained with certainty. I knew perfectly well that Biebush was getting the treasury notes from McCartney, but this precious pair were so cunning in the transaction of their affairs with one another that we were never able to connect them with legal evidence in the case.

WALTER SCOTT, MARVELOUS GENIUS, PASSES AWAY

World Renowned Printing Press Inventor Succumbs to Stroke of Paralysis.

FUNERAL TOMORROW

Made First Folding Machine Attached to Rotary Press—Originator of Color Machines—Father of Web Press.

Walter Scott, world renowned as an inventor and builder of printing machinery and all the appliances used in that business, passed away at his home on East Front street, Saturday night at 10:20, after a lingering illness. It had been several months since he was physically able to attend to business. About five weeks ago he suffered a stroke of apoplexy and since that time had been confined to his bed. He was unconscious from Friday morning and remained in that condition until the end.

In the death of Mr. Scott Plainfield loses a valuable citizen; one who was also interested in its growth, and the printing machine trade also suffers the loss of one of its brightest and most progressive leaders, and one who, perhaps, more than any other in that business, has contributed to its advancement.

As stated in The Daily Press on Saturday, Mr. Scott was born in Ayr, Scotland, May 22, 1844. He was educated at the Ayr Academy and in 1869 came to this country. After spending sometime traveling through the United States he settled in Chicago, where he immediately began the construction of printing and folding machinery. While there he built and attached the first folding machine to a rotary newspaper printing machine which was installed in the office of the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

He was the first one to place printing presses in parallel planes, one above the other with the rolls of paper at one end of the machine and the folder at the other. Mr. Scott was also the inventor of the angle bars which are used on large newspaper presses and was the first to construct the fast running color printing machines for newspaper work, the first machines being installed in the offices of the Chicago Inter-Ocean and New York World. Another invention of importance by Mr. Scott was the all-size rotary web press which cuts off any length of sheet.

During his very active career, Mr. Scott was granted hundreds of pat-

DOLLIVER WITHDRAWS FROM SURROGATE FIGHT

BOROUGH RECORDER NOT IN THE RACE FOR NOMINATION.

Recorder Charles M. Dolliver, of North Plainfield, a nephew of United States Senator J. Q. Dolliver, of Iowa, has the fight for the Republican nomination for surrogate in Somerset county. Mayor Smalley launched his boom at the recent primary nominating meeting of the party in North Plainfield and the suggestion had been favorably received.

Mr. Dolliver uses The Daily Press columns to inform the delegates of the Somerset county Republican convention that he will not allow his name to be considered. His letter follows:

"Editor, the Daily Press:

"I note your article in your issue of Friday, the 13th inst., relative to my 'boom' for surrogate. I thank you for your kind words, and beg leave to say that I am not a candidate for the nomination of surrogate by the Republican party of Somerset county this fall. My friends have been very good in suggesting me, but I take this means of declining the honor.

"Very respectfully yours,
"C. M. DOLLIVER."

THROWN FROM A TRAIN

Hackman John C. Lynch Is Seriously Injured in Metuchen.

HIS SKULL FRACTURED

Attempted To Board Moving Cars at Pennsylvania Station, After Missing Connection at Lehigh Valley's South Plainfield Station.

Attempting to jump on a fast westbound passenger train on the Pennsylvania Railroad at Metuchen late Saturday night, John C. Lynch, of Elizabeth street, for many years one of the best known hackmen at the North avenue station, received injuries which at first it was believed would prove fatal. He was hurried to Muhlenburg hospital, where the physicians in charge discovered the man to be suffering from concussion of the brain and a fractured skull. Prompt medical aid proved effective, and afterremaining in an unconscious condition for several hours, Mr. Yynch partially recovered late yesterday afternoon and this morning he was wholly conscious. While his condition is considered serious, Dr. Fred Hughes, his physician, believes that he will recover.

Mr. Lynch had planned to leave Saturday for a vacation trip to Buffalo, expecting to be away a couple of weeks. He engaged a fellow hackman named Parsons to drive him to the Lehigh Valley railroad station at South Plainfield, where he expected to take a through train. When he arrived at the station he was informed that his train had gone, but that he possibly could catch a throughgh train on the Pennsylvania railroad at Metuchen.

He decided to try and catch that train and instructed Parsons to drive him to Metuchen as quickly as possible. When he reached the railroad station the train had arrived and was pulling out. Being anxious to get aboard, Mr. Lynch jumped out of the carriage and ran at full speed for the train.

He succeeded in catching hold of a guard rail on one of the coaches, but as the train was then traveling at good speed he was unable to pull himself up on the platform. He was dragged fifty feet to a point where the railroad bridge spans the principal street of the town. There his body swung with great force against the iron girders, and he was thrown over the sides to the street, twenty feet below.

Parsons, who had witnessed the accident, hastened to the street, where he found Mr. Lynch lying in an unconscious condition and blood flowing from a deep cut on the head. His first thought was to get a physician, which he did. A hurried investigation showed Mr. Lynch's condition to be serious, and a telephone message to this city summoned the ambulance to Metuchen. In the meantime all that was possible was done for the injured man.

It was after 1 o'clock yesterday morning when Mr. Lynch reached Muhlenburg hospital still in an unconscious condition. The best medical aid was summoned and everything done for the injured man. Yesterday morning a consultation was held by Dr. Hughes and Dr. G. W. Endicott. Aterward it was announced that Mr. Lynch was suffering from a fractured skull and concussion of the brain, but that he had chances for recovery.

Mr. Lynch lives with his mother on Elizabeth street, and is very popular with a large number of acquaintances.

TRINITY RALLY DAY.

Exercises Mark the Resumption of School's Afternoon Sessions.

The first afternoon session since the summer schedule ended was held at Trinity Church Sunday school yesterday, and rally exercises were held to mark the resumption of regular work. The attendance was 15, and five classes reported perfect on roll call. The junior department, of which Mrs. L. R. Schofield is the head, made an especially good showing, 52 of the 62 pupils enrolled being present.

Superintendent F. E. Smith, just returned from his vacation, was in his place to welcome the pupils and teachers back. Horace J. Martin taught the lesson from the desk. Rev. Dr. E. P. Johnson, who has been filling the pulpit since Dr. Schenck's illness, spoke. Miss Nettie Beeching gave a blackboard talk and Miss Etta Reybert sang.

To Live Near Soldier Son.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Pendleton Rogers, of East Front street, are planning to give up their Plainfield home for the present. They will make their home at Sandy Hook so as to be near their son, Lieutenant N. Pendleton Rogers, Jr., who has just been assigned to that station.

Scheuer & Co. store will be closed all day on Wednesday on account of Holiday 9 14 3

Mueller, of the Braunsdorf - Mueller Manufacturing Company, as one of the Assembly candidates. Mr. Mueller is an officer in all the leading German organizations of Elizabeth and county, and has a large personal acquaintance in the community as a whole.

William E. Tuttle, of Westfield, where there is a lot of dissatisfaction among Republicans because Randolph Perkins was turned down by his party for a renomination, and Frederick C. Hyer, a lawyer, of Rahway, will be named as Mueller's companions on the ticket.

The candidate for surrogate against George T. Parrot will be Leroy Gibby, of Summit.

The normal Republican majority in this county is about 1,800, but last year Union was carried by slightly more than 100 by James E. Martine in the Congressional fight against Charles N. Fowler, and the Assembly majority dwindled to about 1,200

UNCONSCIOUS AFTER FALL FROM MOTORCYCLE

HASELTON RAN INTO A DOG; ANIMAL GOT WORST OF IT.

Riding on a motorcycle to New Brunswick, Saturday night, Walter S. Haselton, of Dunellen, ran into a dog near the former place, and was thrown on his head. He lay in the road unconscious for a short time, but recovered sufficiently to ride back home, with Jack Faber, who had accompanied him on another cycle, on his own machine. The motorcycle was not much damaged.

Mr. Haselton lost a lot of skin, and was too stiff yesterday to leave his bed. Dr. T. H. Platt, Jr., of Dunellenfi dressed his cuts and abrasions Nobody knows how the dog made out. It was last seen crawling away with its hind legs dragging. No one felt interested enough to follow it.

—The employes of Walter Scott & Co. will meet tomorrow, September 17, 1907, at 2:30, to attend the funeral of the late Mr. Scott, by order of the committee. ***

YEA! A GREAT CLAMBAKE

Eagles Feast Mightily Amid the Rural Delights of Dog Corner.

"FEATURES" IN PLENTY

Ball Game For One Thing—Frank Hart's Pearl For Another, Not to Mention Pilgrims From St. Louis.

Eagles like cooked clams, lobsters and sliced watermelon. This sounds like a nature fake, but it isn't. Common or garden eagles who roost on rocks may diet on raw lamb and stray children, but the Fraternal Order birds, subdivision Plainfield Aerie, No. 866, may be kept in playful humor if fed on the light but nutritious edibles first mentioned; also steamed fish, chicken, sweet potatoes, and corn; which was demonstrated beyond the shadow of scientific doubt at Scott Terry's place, Dog Corner, yesterday afternoon.

It was a great clambake. Every one of the 200 places provided was filled; so were the people in the places. Morris, the Perth Amboy bake expert, outdid himself, and the feasters ate until they couldn't eat any more. At that, there was a lot of stuff left. Small boys from all about the place took home clams, corn and other things, and every now and then observant nature lovers might have seen Eagles on their homeward way with lobsters clasped fondly to their breasts.

As was remarked before, it was a great bake. The members and friends lucky enough to have tickets began to gather on the scene in the morning. They had a lot of fun watching the preparations for the feast, taking a nibble at baseball and a taste of a celebrated German appetitizer now and then to keep themselves in shape for the pleasant but arduous work ahead at the tables.

Buck Anderson hurled a baseball challenge at Dan Guinee while the wait was on, and Dan hurled a defi or words to that effect in return. Then Buck got Fred Meeker and Dan got Frank McCabe to help them, and started the game. There were others in the game, but they wouldn't stay put and don't deserve any of the glory, of which there is enough to go around among all the four heroes, not to mention George Wood, who played under Meeker's name, and Pat Guinee, who didn't play at all but told the umpire what to do. Both sides won, because what Buck didn't get in the game, he made at the table; he remembered a run every time he thought of the contest, and Dan had a hard time figuring up to him. It was a grand struggle, and equal to anything in the Ananias league in its best days.

The ball game wasn't the only excitement. Frank Hart, sitting at the second table with the gentlemen help, got a pearl out of a clam. He announced the find with a whoop, and gave up the rest of his refreshment to show it to all the fellows who had pitied him while they were eating and he was passing them things to swallow. The pearl is authentically reported to be as big as the tip of Frank's little finger. Frank's little finger is not so little, and estimates of the pearl's value range from $75 to $1,000.

Among the sights enjoyed by those present were Cyrus Henshaw and Edward Kendall, who had never seen a clam before. They come from St Louis. Tom Fay, who is entertaining them, chaperoned them to the bake. They had the time of their lives, and one of the things that tickled them was the stare of unbelief with which their lack of clam knowledge was received by skeptics who didn't know how far St. Louis was from tidewater.

It surely was a great bake, as has been hinted, and the committee smiled pleasantly, if tiredly, at one another when it wound up at dusk. They worked hard and are entitled to a full-sized bundle of credit. The committee was made up of Daniel Shea, Hugh Reilly, H. Adams, E. J. McCann, and S. P. Abieniste. Henry Adams, Dan Force, Frank Hart and Michael Higgins helped them keep things moving.

Funeral Mrs. C. H. Monsell.

The funeral of Mrs. C. H. Monsell, of Clinton avenue, was held at the Church of the Heavenly Rest Saturday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Townsend, the rector, officiating. There was a large gathering of friends and many floral tributes. The burial was in the M. E. Cemetery in Plainfield avenue.

MARTINE HOPEFUL ON EVE OF THE CONVENTION

POLICE HAVE SUSPECT ARRESTED IN N. Y. CITY

NEGRO ACCUSED OF PLANNING THE BURGLARIES ON ARLINTON AVENUE.

For alleged complicity in the burglary of the houses of D. M. Runyon and Charles Parker, Arlington avenue, on August 23, John Hunt, a negro, was arrested by the New York police yesterday for the local authorities. He was remanded for thirty days this morning, and Chief Kiely will have extradition papers prepared.

Missouri Hurling, a young colored girl, arrested for connection with the same thefts, is now being held at the county jail. Hunt's alleged connection with the robberies was discovered through the arrest of the girl. She was suspected and run down last week. She confessed, and statements in her confession put the police on Hunt's trail. He is said to have planned both robberies, using the girl as his tool. She worked for Mr. Runyon, and was familiar with the interior of both houses. The things stolen from the two places are valued at $250.

Not much is known of Hunt in this city. The police believe him to have a criminal record.

SENATOR ACKERMAN TO SIT IN THE CONVENTION

MAYOR C. J. FISK WIRES HIS PROXY AS A DELEGATE.

State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman will sit in the Republican State convention at Trenton on Thursday as a delegate from Union county. According to reliable information received by The Daily Press it is very probable that the Senator will be chosen as chairman of the Union county delegation. It has been the custom for some years to make the representative in the Upper House the head of the county delegation to such conventions, and it is in line with that policy to choose Mr. Ackerman for the place.

From Woodstock, Vt., where Mayor Charles J. Fisk is resting for a few weeks with his family, a proxy has been sent to this city made out by Mayor Fisk in favor of Senator Ackerman. Mr. Fisk and G. W. V. Moy are the accredited delegates from the Third Ward to the State convention. Mr. Moy is determined to occupy his seat, and when Mayor Fisk learned of that fact he immediately wired his credentials to Mr. Ackerman, following the telegram up with a proxy made out in the proper form.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS GET PASTOR'S RESIGNATION.

Congregation Reluctant to Accept Rev. Mr. Shaw's Resignation.

The resignation of Rev. George B. Shaw, as pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, to take effect January 1 next, was reluctantly accepted at a special meeting of the congregation held last night. There were many expressions of regret, but after Mr. Shaw's explanation that he decided to make the change because he believed that the church at North Loup, Neb., needs him more than the Plainfield church, there was no further comment.

A comittmee comprisihg Prof. Henry M. Maxson, David E. Titsworth and Dr. Frank S. Wells was appointed to look over the field for a successor to Mr. Shaw. They will meet and report subject to the call of the trustees of the church.

Bail For Evans.

John Evans, the young machinist accused of complicity in an assault on a non-union workingman in Pittsburg, was released under bail in that city this morning. Impressed by his willingness to return and face the charge, and the assistance he lent them in carrying through their end of the arrest, the authorities placed no obstacle in the way of his getting bail. He secured a bondsman without trouble, and the Pittsburg lawyer who is handling the case for Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., and Judge William N. Runyon, who are his lawyers, sent the latter word this morning that there would be no necessity of their coming to Pittsburg at present.

Fred Dunavan's Wheel Stolen.

While he was making purchases at James Blair's men's furnishing goods store on Park avenue, Saturday night, about 11 o'clock, someone stole Fred Dunavan's bicycle, which stood in front of the store.

Farmer-Orator Sanguine That He Will Be Nominee of Democrats for Governorship.

CHILD HAS WITHDRAWN

Katzenbach Still Popular But Those On Inside Say Plainfielder Will Be Named On Second Ballot.

On the eve of the State convention, "Farmer-orator" James E. Martine, of this city, appears to be confident that he will be named as the party's

James E. Martine.

Gubernatorial candidate. Surrounded by a crowd of enthusiastic admirers, among whom were anumber of influential and friendly Republicans, the Cedar brook veteran of many political encounters declared that his name would be flashed across the State tomorrow after the second ballot is announced at Trenton as the choice of the minority party to the greatest office in the gift of the popular vote.

To the Daily Press man, Martine said today: "I can only say that I was never more confident than I am now. I do not intend to go into details, but I tell you on my reputation as a truthful citizen that I believe that my party will nominate me tomorrow. If they do, I'll stump the State from Sussex to Cape May, and there will be no question as to where I stand on any question. I have already announced some of the principal planks that I believe should be inserted in the platform. If there is any doubt as to where I stand on any other question of the day, I will be glad to furnish the information. When I come back to town tomorrow night, Mr. Press man, I will be a candidate for the office I seek."

The special chartered by the Union county Democrats will leave Elizabeth at 8:45 tomorrow morning on the Jersey Central, and will stop at Plainfield to pick up a couple of hundred enthusiastic Martine shouters, among whom will be a number of Republican admirers, at 9:15. Martine's headquarters will be at the Hotel Stirling, and he will be on hand there tonight.

James E. Martine, Union county's "farmer orator," looms larger as a Gubernatorial possibility with Child out of the race. It was said last winter when the Democratic minority of the Senate and the majority of the House agreed upon Martine as their candidate for United States Senator to succeed John F. Dryden that it was a forerunner of the nomintaion for Governor. Essex may finally go to him for the nomination.

Ex-Judge Francis Child, of Newark, announced yesterday that he would not consent to be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of New Jersey at Trenton tomorrow.

In a brief statement, the first he has made since his name was brought forward prominently by the Essex Democrats as the probable choice of the delegation of that county, Mr. Child said:

"I desire that my name shall not be presented to the convention. I do not desire that the delegation from Essex county or any other delegation shall place me in nomination. I could not accept the nomination if tendered me, much as I appreciate the honor which some of my good friends have sought to bestow upon me. I would like it made clear that my decision not to be a candidate is final and conclusive."

Mr. Child did not consult the Democratic leaders of Essex, and his announcement was as surprising to

PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

The local team defeated the Y. M. C. A. team Saturday afternoon at Crescent Oval in a one-sided game, the score being 16 to 5. The home team had its batting eye open and knocked Scott out of the box in the third inning. Conover replaced him, but fared no better, retiring in the seventh, and Scott again went in. In the eighth and ninth innings the local team made no attempt to score, batting the ball out and allowing the Y. M. C. A. to throw them out at first. The game was so one-sided that only a handful of people stayed to see teh finish. Manager Frentz put Mahaffey in the box for two innings Saturday. Taylor had the goods, and showed that he could pitch some as well as cover third base.

The dedication of All Saints Episcopal church, which was to have been held in May, will take place Sunday, November 6. A special service in commemoration of the event will be held. The church is undergoing repairs both exterior and interior, besides this, a new pipe organ is to be installed, new carpets laid and the auditorium completely renovated. Some of these improvements will be completed in time for the dedication. Rev. William Mulford, the rector of the church, has charge of the arrangements.

Funeral service of the late Edwin Wright, who died at his home on Park avenue at an early hour Saturday morning, will be held this afternoon at 5 o'clock. The services will be in charge of Rev. William Mulford, rector of All Saints Episcopal church, of which the deceased was a regular attendant.

Rev. George Francis, of Plainfield, preached at the Baptist church yesterday morning. No evening service was held.

The members of the Epworth League held their regular weekly meeting last night in the Methodist church.

La Pere Beekon led an interesting meeting of the B. Y. P. U., held last night in the parlor of the Baptist church.

The park about the station has received its monthly clean-up and looks very pretty.

John Rickerson has returned from a visit with friends in Bound Brook.

BLEACHERS FALL

At Somerville Game; No One Much Hurt; Locals Lose.

Some of the thousand persons who attended the ball game between the West End and High Bridge nines at Somerville Saturday afternoon had a narrow escape from serious injury when the bleachers on the north side of the diamond collapsed. The bleachers gave way early in the first inning, but luckily no one was seriously injured.

West End put a fast article of ball through the entire nine rounds, but could do no better than tie with the visitors, 3 to 3. Torpey's home run drive for High Bridge in the last of the ninth wrested victory from the local team. The score:

	R.	H.	E.
W. E'd	0 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	2	3 6 2
H. B..	2 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 1	3	5 5

Batteries—Egnel and Justice; Kraft and Torpey.

FOOTBALL.

There promises to be some good football in Plainfield this fall. The Plainfield High School will have an eleven on the gridiron and will strive to renew the interest in the game. Last year, owing to the objections of the parents of the High School boys, the game was given up for the season. This years finds a lot of new material in the school, and the chances for a strong team are bright. The candidates are practising every day and the season's schedule will be announced soon.

Prospects are good for a strong team at the North Plainfield High school, where Prof. Benjamin Phelps, the new principal, who is an athlete himself, will have charge of the school athletics. He has already been looking over the available material, and he believes that it will be possible to organize an eleven that will make it interesting for other teams in its class. It is expected that the candidates will be called out soon for practise.

Thus far nothing has been heard of the Alis football team for this season. Usually this club has the strongest eleven in the city, and in past years its record has been a good one. It is expected that within a few days the Alis boys will get together and get rapidly in condition for play.

Plainfield football enthusiasts will follow with interest the work of Ray Biglow as captain of Yale's 'varsity team. His record last year was highly praised by collegians and the newspapers generally. More than one victory last year was due to his exceptional work on the eam. Biglow began his football career at Leal's school, where he was the backbone of the team during the years he attended school there.

Princeton is getting busy in football, and the wise ones who are in a position to judge declare that the Jersey college will have one of the strongest teams in its history. The old grads are returning to lend their support and help in coaching the candidates, and it is safe to say that by the time arrives to start the schedule the Tigers will be a fit bunch to meet its opponents.

The Cornell-Princeton game this year will be played at Ithaca and not at the Polo Grounds, New York, as stated recently. This is to be regretted, for thousands of football enthusiasts will be deprived of seeing the contest.

GOLF.

Jerome D. Travers, the national golf champion, made a new record for the links of the Glen Ridge Golf Club Friday by going round in 71. The old record was 74, made by Alex Cuningham, the professional. On the last nine holes he had seven 4s.

There continues to be some doubt as to whether or not the eMtropolitan Golf Association will hold an open championship tournament this fall. Several months ago the association sent out an announcement to the effect that it would hold its third open tournament for professionals and amateurs some time during September, provided a club in the association would offer its links.

In referring to the subject Leighton Calkins, the Metropolitan Golf Association secretary, said that prompt action will be necessary if the open is to be held this year. He also stated that the association stands ready to assume half the expense. It has been estimated that about $750 will be required for such a tournament, so if any club takes hold it will mean an outlay of approximately $375. Some weeks ago it was unofficially stated that the Baltusrol Golf Club would handle the tournament, but not before October.

Entries for the invitation tournament of the Morris County Golf Club, September 19, 20 and 21, will close with Alfred Macy, the secretary, at Convent Station, N. J., tomorrow. The maker of low score in the eighteen-hole qualification round will receive a cup presented by Charles Scribner. The Thomas, Frelinghuysen and Foote cups will be offered for the first, second and third sixteens, respectively.

Many invitations have been issued for the tournament to be held over the links of the Huntingdon Valley Country Club, near Philadelphia, September 19, 20 and 21. Those who qualify in the first sixteen will continue at at match play for the Philadelphia Cup. There will also be second and third sixteens. According to the conditions, the chief cup must be won three times before becoming the property of any one player.

Jerome D. Travers, the national amateur champion, came out second best in a recent home-and-home match with Dave Hunter, the Essex County Country Club professional. Travers played three rounds at the Country Club, but finished down every time, as the "pro" returned scores of 75, 73 and 71. The amateur then got Hunter to go to Montclair for revenge, but the result was the same as at Essex county.

Although the municipal golf house at Forest Park was practically finished several months ago the golfers are still waiting to enter. It had been expected that the opening would take place on Memorial Day, but one postponement after another has been in order, so that the looked-for day remains shrouded in as much mystery as ever. The structure has cost upwards of $50,000.

RAILROAD COMMISSION REPORTS OF ACCIDENTS

ACTING SECRETARY ISSUES STATEMENT COVERING WEEK SEPTEMBER 7.

Acting Secretary Joseph Maybury, of the State Railroad Commission, has just prepared a statement showing the number of accidents occuring on the various railroads throughout the State for the week ending September 7 inclusive. During this period there were seven killed and eight injured. Of this number there were killed one passenger, three employes and three trespassers. Of the injured, one was a passenger, one an employe, one a trespasser and five others.

On the Lackawanna Railroad, one of the persons killed was an unidentified man found between the tracks. Another was an employe who was injured in the Hoboken yards by an engine tender. Another person was killed at the East Newark drawbridge.

On the Lehigh Valley Railroad, one passenger was killed by walking off the rear end of a train which was approaching a station in Newark. The other was an unidentified man who was killed while attempting to get off a freight train.

On the Reading Railroad a brakeman was killed at Port Reading while coupling cars.

On the Erie Railroad three boys were injured at Passaic Park. The boys, it appears, went into a freight caboose for shelter, and during the time they were in the caboose a freight engine ran into it. None of the boys, it appears, was seriously injured.

On the Central Railroad, two horses were killed at Dunellen while being driven over the grade crossing at that point. The driver succumbed later. Another accident on this road occurred in the Jersey City train sheds, when a passenger was fatally injured while a passenger was fatally injured while alighting from the car when the train was moving. An employe was killed at Plainfield while attempting to cross the tracks in front of the Plainfield passenger station. A switchman at Point Pleasant also was killed.

On the New York and Long Branch Railroad, near Red Bank, an unidentified man was killed, and it appears by the report that the person was sitting on the tracks and before the engine stopped he was run down and instantly killed.

On the Pennsylvania Railroad a young woman was struck at Phillipsburg and internally injured while attempting to cross the tracks while a train was approaching.

BEDS AND BEDMAKING.

Many False Notions on This Important Subject Exploded.

Many people used to have an impression that to sleep on a soft bed had a spice of wickedness in it and that the harder the mattress the greater the virtue of the sleeper.

This arose in great part from the fact that feather beds were generally condemned as unhealthy, and the ignorant at once seized the idea that they were unhealthy because soft, whereas they are unhealthy because they do not permit of proper ventilation.

More and more we learn that the foundation of health lies in an abundant supply of fresh air and that the root of many a disease is in the want of it. In health many of us spend a third of our time actually in bed and in sickness much more, so it is of the greatest importance that the bed and everything connected with it should be thoroughly ventilated.

It goes without saying that the bed-room must itself be airy and the fresh air have free access to it.

From the point of view of health it is a matter of indifference whether the bedstead be of wood or of iron, but the most comfortable and at the some time healthy are those fitted with chain spring mattresses. These mattresses may be bought separately and fitted to any bedstead.

Frist Aid Valise.

Are you thinking of taking a number of youngsters on a vacation, or are you off for a motor trip.

If you are you need a first aid valise, This is the latest product of those purveyors who are always inventing something useful for the motorist. It is a small but very useful receptacle of remedies for bruises, cuts and other ills that may, alas, befall the traveler en automobile.

Rolls of lint, flasks of cooling and healing lotions, scissors, a small bottle of brandy and other items of first aid utility are contained in a little leather box, the color of which must be determined by the lining of the car. Of course, it may servie on any sort of jaunt.

LEGISLATURE TOMORROW

Assembly Will Adjourn Quickly But Senate Will Pass Utilities Bill.

AS TO EXCISE MATTER

Little Possibility of Senate Agreeing to Modification—Stand Taken By Democrats.

Unless the present plan of the Democratic leaders goes awry, the Assembly will adjourn without date tomorrow at an hour which will antedate the adoption of a platform and the nomination of a candidate for Governor by the party's State convention the same day. It is quite probable that the Senate will assent to an early adjournment as the Republican leaders are anxious to have the legislative session terminated in time to give the record proper attention in the platform which the State Republican committee will endeavor to get in shape at a meeting in the Republican Club, Trenton, tomorrow night.

The Republicans are not averse, but the contrary seem rather anxious to have the Democratic platform contin a review of the work of the session, to which they may reply two days later. A call has been issued for the Senators to assemble at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, the same hour to which the House of Assembly stands adjourned.

All the Senate proposes to do is pass the public utility bill prepared by a special committee, of which Senators Hillery and Robbins are the surviving members, Judge Minturn having resigned as a Senator, and the House will pass no bills with the possible exception of a duplicate of the Lee local option bill, amended to make it apply to all municipalities instead of Atlantic City and East Orange, which are the only cities affected by the bill which Lee introduced.

The Democrats will assume the attitude that inasmuch as both wings of the Republican party are on record as declaring the regulation of the liquor traffic to be important, it is the duty of the Legislature to dispose of it now and eliminate it as one of the features of the pending campaign.

There is little possibility of the Senate agreeing to any modification of the excise laws this year, and the manner in which the Lee bill was received and buried in the municipal corporation committee, of which Senator Hutchinson, of Mercer, is chairman, makes it quite certain that no bill containing the wide-open provisions of the Lee measure will receive any consideration.

Special Train to Democratic State Convention.

The New Jersey Central will have a special train to the Democratic State Convention at Trenton on September 17th, leaving Plainfield at 9.03 a. m. Reduced rate ticket good to return until September 18th, will be sold at $1.26. 9-13-4

WALTER SCOTT PASSES AWAY

ents and many patents are now pending, embodying improvements in lithographing, printing, stereotyping and other machinery connected with the art of printing. His death is considered a great loss to the printing art, as he was admitted to be the brainest man in the printing machinery line, as the paents granted to him show his master mind. Mr. Scott was conceded to be a genius in his line. His great success was due not only because of his inventive ability, but because he personally supervised every department of his great plant, which he built in 1884 on South avenue.

For the last few years Mr. Scott has been carefully tutoring his sons, David and Walter Scott, in all branches of press manufacturing and during his late illness they have had the active management of affairs and Mr. Scott's death will make no change as the two sons will now carry on the business.

Mr. Scott is survived by a wife, two sons, David and Walter Scott, one daughter, Miss Isabelle Scott, and one niece, Miss Christine Scott. The funeral will be held from the late home tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock and the burial will be in Hillside cemetery.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Nixon & Zimmerman's merry, musical novelty, "Simple Simon Simple," which has made such a big hit in Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, Pittsburg and other cities since last seen here, will be the attraction at the New Plainfield theatre September 20, and naturally more than usual interest is manifested in the coming of a show which has been so well spoken of elsewhere.

"Patsy in Politics," a musical comedy craze protector is said to be a deliciously tempestuous conglomeration of animated fun and norsense, richly seasoned with the spices of some of the most popularly tuneful conceits ever furnished for a like purpose. "Patsy" will come here on September 19.

The eminent American tragedian, John Griffith, is playing Shakespeare's sublime tragedy, "King Richard the Third," this season, and has in every city along his route drawn tremendous audiences and aroused great enthusiasm. He is a big, manly fellow, full of devotion to his art, and his portrayal of this most strenuous role certainly fills the eye and satisfies the mind of the most exacting critic. Mr. Griffith appears here on September 18.

A new comic opera character by De Wolf Hopper is a theatrical treat promised us next Saturday afternoon and evening at the New Plainfield, when the Shuberts will present an entirely new comic opera, entitled "Happyland," written expressly for Mr. Hopper by Reginald De Koven and Frederic Ranken, and staged by R. H. Burnside. "Happyland" is in two acts and is said to be a straight comic opera, with the usual elaborateness in the matter of scenery and costumes that characterizes all of the recent Shubert shows.

Charming Adelaide Thurston appears dressed as a boy in the first act of her play, "The Girl From Out Yonder." She wears the oil skins of a fisher boy, not so much because she thinks they look pretty, as because she is better able to handle her boat than she would be in the conventional garb of a girl.

Much of the comedy in "The Lion and the Mouse," which Henry B. Harris will offer in this city tonight, is furnished by the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley, the private secretary to "Ready Money Ryder." Bagley has secured his position chiefly because of his knowledge of the social code, and one speech where he delivers with evident pride, is that he "spent four years as third groom to the bedchamber of the second son of England's Queen."

NEW BOYS' SECRETARY COMING TO THE Y. M. C. A.

L. W. DEGAST, OF BUTLER, PA. WILL TAKE CHARGE OCT. 1.

L. W. De Gast, of Butler, Pa., has accepted the position of boys' secretary of the Y. M. C. A., which has been vacant since February 1. He will enter on his duties here about October 1.

Mr. De Gast is twenty-nine years old. He has a noteworthy record of constructive work, and the association officials, who have been looking for a successor to Mr. Barrows with unusual care, are satisfied that they have secured one who will make the department stronger and bigger than it has ever been. In the two years he was at the Butler association Mr. De Gast brought the membership from 90 to 200. Before going to Butler he was at the Wilkesbarre association. He is a former newspaper man.

HOODLUMS BREAK FIVE WINDOWS IN A CHURCH.

Grove Street Congregation Has Suffered Much From Mischief Makers.

Malicious mischief by hoodlums, who have been annoying the members and officials of the Christian church, Grove street, for months, was called to the attention of the borough police this morning. Rev. Phil Parreported to Chief Marshal George Weiss that the gang broke the glass in five of the church windows last Friday night.

Mr. Parsons says that the depretions have been going on for a year, and that while the officials of the church feel sure that they know who are the guilty ones, they are unable to prove the cases. The latest attack on the church building has thoroughly aroused the church members, and they are determined to stop the practise. The congregation being a small one, it can hardly afford to pay for the services of a policeman during services, but the members feel that they are entitled to protection.

ELKS' CLAMBAKE WAS HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL.

Somerville Lodge Nine Wins the Ball Game; Some Speeches.

All the success expected of it attended the third annual clambake of Plainfield Lodge, B. P. O. E., at Watchung Springs, Saturday afternoon. The attendance numbered 150. The bake was served on time, at 3 o'clock.

Ball teams representing the Somerville lodge, which sent thirty members to the bake, and the local organization, played a hot game. Chester Cauley's Somervillians won, defeating William Townley's athletes, 14 to 12.

Exalted Ruler George O. Stevens and Fred Wink, head of the Somerville lodge, spoke.

Thieves at Oak Tree P. O.

Thieves effected an entrance into George W. Stover's general store and postoffice at Oak Tree, Saturday night, it being one of the many similar raids made at that place. The booty taken by the thieves consisted of cigars, tobacco, cake, etc. No money or stamps were taken, as Postmaster Stover had placed these in a safe place.

I. O. O. F. At Church.

Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, and Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., to the number of about seventy, attended services at St. Stephen's church, last night, upon the invitation of the rector, Rev. A. S. Peck, who preached a special sermon.

Funeral of Mrs. F. B. Martin.

The funeral service of Mrs. Frances Beach Martin, widow of Lebbeus L. Martin, was held at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon from the late home, 114 Madison avenue. Rev. C. E. Herring officiated. The burial was in the family plot at Hillside Cemetery.

ex-Senator Smith and State Committeeman Nugent, who have been looked upon as his most influential supporters, as it was to the members of the delegation, all of whom were ready to declare him their choice in the caucus of Essex men tonight.

Martine's following is limited to no one party. He has the solid labor vote behind him in his campaign, and there are Colbyites who see in him the true type of a model Governor, so they say. Even the Republican county leaders are frank to admit that there is grave fear of the county's position should Martine be the standard bearer of his party. This comes to the Daily Press man first hand.

Information received by the Daily Press man today, gives strong probability that before nightfall James E. Martine will command the majority of strength at the convention tomorrow. This comes from an unquestionable source.

Funeral of W. A. Westphal.

The funeral service of William A. Westphal was held yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the Church of the Holy Cross, where a large number of relatives and friends gathered. Rev. George A. Warner, rector of the church, officiated. There were a number of floral tributes from relatives and friends. The burial was in Hillside Cemetery, beside the grave of his wife, and the pallbearers, with the exception of Cornelius Taylor, are all members of Miantonomo Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, with which Mr. Westphal was at one time identified. They were Andrew Stiglitz, Charles L. Holstein, Cornelius Taylor, Peter Sheridan, Samuel Montross, John Clark, John Cashman and Thomas Connor.

The convention will be composed of 1,210 delegates, making 606 votes necessary for the choice of the Gubernatorial nominee.

The delegates by counties will be as follows: Atlantic, 34; Bergen, 69; Burlington, 3; Camden, 92; Cape May, 18; Cumberland, 33; Essex, 186; Gloucester, 23; Hudson, 208; Hunterdon, 28; Mercer, 67; Middlesex, 44; Monmouth, 58; Morris, 45; Ocean, 20; Passaic, 72; Salem, 18; Somerset, 27; Sussex, 25; Union, 65, and Warren, 28.

It was claimed by the political managers of Frank S. Katzenbach, former Mayor of Trenton, last night that they would have 500 of the 1,200 delegates on the first, or informal ballot. That will not nominate, but they declare that their candidate will have more than any other man, and they count on Camden and some other of the doubtful counties falling into line on the formal vote.

ONE MAN'S WAY

By ANNA BANCROFT COUSHAINE.

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

He was a royal good fellow, was Jack Bell, a leading light in the newspaper world and the writer of some of the cleverest bits ever published in the Call, but notwithstanding his environment, he had no love for the Bohemian life and his pleasantest hours were those spent in his own cozy flat with his charming wife and two youngsters.

Theirs had been a love match, pure and simple and five years had passed without a ripple to disturb the serenity of their married life. In the winters they had lived in town—as a rule they spent part of the summer with Mrs. Bell's relatives in Pennsylvania. The year of which I write, however, the publisher of the Call had given Jack a big assignment which would mean a couple of weeks in the Shenandoah Valley and with the golden harvest and a wealth of material for magazine work in view he had gaily hied to the southern states.

"O, no, Genevieve, its quite impossible. I have a fine photograph of you and Beth and Meg riding a prancing animal through the Shenandoah—I'm going on horseback, you know—better go to your mother's and take the youngsters with you and have a good, quiet, restful time. I'll be back in a fortnight."

Of course that settled the matter, if Jack was going on horseback Mrs. Jack couldn't go, but his footsteps hadn't died away when womanlike she began to plan to "get even."

"Well," she said to herself, "I will go to mother's and I'll stay and stay and stay, and give him a chance to get good and lonesome, that's what I'll do to him."

The Shenandoah trip was pleasant and fruitful, but it didn't consume all of the time Bell had allotted for it, and there were two days of the fortnight left when he got back home.

"I'll surprise Genevieve," he thought, I'll get the house aired, and have some papering done before I let her know I'm home."

He found enough to keep him busy for four days and last of all sent for a cleaning woman to come over and put on the finishing touches—then when everything was in readiness, he telegraphed Genevieve—"Had a through ticket to Buffalo, am home now, when will I meet you. Jack."

To his amazement, the telegram brought forth no eager reply from Kentshire and in an agony of fear lest some one might be ill he called Mrs. Jack on the long distance.

"Yes, this is Genevieve, is that you, Harry?"

"Harry—well, I should say not, who the devil is Harry?"

"Well, you are very rude, whoever you are, I guess you've got the wrong number."

"No, I haven't; I want to speak to Mrs. Jack Bell."

"Well, this is Mrs. Bell, who are you?"

"Why, it's me, dear, Jack; but I say, who is Harry?"

"Oh, is that you, Jack, well, for goodness sakes, didn't know your voice."

"Oh, you didn't. I say, who were you expecting to hear from?"

"Who was what? I can't hear very well, dear, there's something wrong with the line."

"I say, W-H-O I-S H-A-R-R-Y—"

Oh, Harry? Oh, he is—don't cut me off, Central—well, upon my word, did you ever hear any thing like that racket? I can't hear a word you say, Jack, better call me up to-morrow."

What Jack Bell didn't say to that phone and later to the operator, wouldn't be worth repeating.

"Harry, Harry, I'd like to know who in—well it's the Baltimore for me, I guess, for a few days longer." And the Baltimore it was with pool at the press club for many nights, in fact, so many that he was contemplating a trip to Kentshire when a letter from Genevieve arrived.

"Dear Jack:—I know you are getting along famously, and we are having a lovely time. Sis is home and we are going out a great deal. Mother is going to New York next week for a month and I've promised to stay here till she gets back, you don't mind, do you dear? It's so easy for you to get your meals at that nice little place at the corner. Harry is here, too. Be careful not to leave the windows open when you go down town in the morning, I don't want the rain to ruin the carpets. Bye, bye, be a good boy. Affectionately, Genevieve."

"Another month, another month, eh," and the man who hated the corner restaurant, hated the club room and was beginning to hate every thing else, groaned aloud, "Another month? Well, by gum, she can stay two months, and I won't ask her to come home, and I won't go down there, either. Now, Mrs. John Henry Bell, if you are so doggoned fond of the country, you just stay there till you get good and ready to come home. Somehow or another he managed to get through three weeks of the month and then the spirit of loneliness oppressed him. "I'll fix her, all right. She will come home, but it won't be for my asking."

That night he took his sister and a young friend who was visiting her by name, Miss Polly Pert, to the Saturday hop at the Yacht club; next day he and Polly and sister dined at one of the down town hotels. Two or three days later the two young ladies happened in his sanctum about noon and that meant a luncheon together. Neith er sister nor Polly divined the reason for the sudden avalanche of attentions but they agreed on one point, that it was jolly good of Jack.

On Sunday Miss Katherine Bell wrote her sister-in-law a long letter in which she faithfully chronicled the good times she and Jack and Polly were having—automobile rides, theaters, boat rides and dances. Two days later Jack received a very snappy little letter from Mrs. Jack in which she said a few things that won't bear repeating and closing with this paragraph:

"Run down and spend the week end with us, Jack. I know it's expensive, but then you might as well be spending your money that way as wasting it in other directions. I won't be home for a couple of weeks yet. Lovingly, Genevieve."

"O, so you won't be home for a couple of weeks yet," groaned the lonely one. "Very well, lovingly Genevieve, nor will I go to Kentshire for a couple of weeks yet.

That night Genevieve received a telegram that made her bite her lips with vexation: "Can't come Saturday, business engagement, have promised to take Katherine and friends for a launch ride Sunday. Jack."

"O, the hateful hateful thing. I don't believe there is a meaner man in the world; he wouldn't ask me to come—well, I'll go for spite and I'll spoil that launch ride for 'friends,' too, so I will."

"Poor Gen, it's a shame to tease her so," mused Bell as he watched the wreaths of smoke curl to the ceiling of his den, "but then she deserves it. I wonder who the dickens Harry is. She never mentions him in her letters."

Was it intuition or a perfect understanding of the woman he had married that made him stop at the florists that night and order a great bunch of roses.

"Guess I'd better telephone to Mrs. Moriarity to come over and sweep up and get something to eat in the house. There's no telling what may happen."

The next morning before he was up this telegram came: "Will be home on the noon train; will expect you at the depot. Harry is with me. Genevieve."

"Harry is with her? Well, some things are liable to happen to Harry."

"Yes, this is the train from the east—O, here they are. Well, you dear girl, how ever did you manage to get along with the youngsters, and—well, who is this?" with an inquiring glance at a fifteen-year-old who was carrying the youngest of the children.

"That—O, that's Harry Maxwell—Elizabeth Maxwell's little son; he's been spending the summer with mother and I brought him on to Buffalo for a little visit."

It is needless to say that Harry was not annihilated and it wasn't until after she had gone into raptures over the roses and the dinner that Mrs. Jack remembered to express her regret at making Jack miss his launch ride.

"Why, you dear old girl, I'd miss 20 launch rides to get you back, but to tell the truth, that launch ride was a hoax, I had to say something that would bring you home."

And then they both laughed.

BOTH UPS AND DOWNS.

Pair of Comedians Have Fun with Broadway Storekeeper.

The following story is accredited to Miss Phyllis Rankin, who in private life is Mrs. Harry Davenport:

"My husband and I went into a Broadway umbrella store a few days ago," says Miss Rankin. "A sign reading 'Umbrellas, $1 up,' was displayed in the window.

"'How much down?' asked Mr. Davenport.

"'All cash down,' answered the salesman innocently. 'This is not a credit house.'

"'But I mean how much do I have to put up for an umbrella put down?' asked Mr. Davenport.

"The salesman looked a bit perplexed. 'We have them for $1 up,' he said.

"'I know,' replied Mr. Davenport, 'but I don't want to buy one up; I want to buy one down. I can put it up myself.'

"'O,' said the salesman, smiling gently, 'you are speaking of the umbrella, while I am speaking of the price.'

"'And now I understand, too,' returned Mr. Davenport, 'it is the price that is $1 up. Then it isn't exactly $1 down as you said?'

"'Exactly. But perhaps you would like to talk with the proprietor.'

"The salesman hurried to the rear of the store, and I overheard him explaining to his employer; also I heard remarks about an insane asylum. The proprietor came blandly forward and said, 'We storekeepers have our ups and downs, but—' At this we bought an umbrella and fled."—Bohemian.

Found Treasure in a Tree.

A singular case of treasure trove is reported from the Belgian village of Saint Omer-Capelle, where some boys climbed an old willow tree to rob a bird's nest found in a hole high up in the trunk an old leather bag.

On opening this they found it to contain what seemed to be bright yellow counters and pieces of paper, bearing writing which they did not understand. So they made playthings of the lot, and gave some away, without, however, anything being damaged.

As soon as the find reached the ears of the parents they naturally guessed the truth. Some among them, being honestly disposed, gave information to the Mairie, which after some trouble resulted in the whole contents of the bag being got together again. They were old notes and gold representing 20,000 francs.

BOB HAMPTON of PLACER

By RANDALL PARRISH AUTHOR OF "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING" "MY LADY OF THE NORTH" "HISTORIC ILLINOIS," ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY A.C. McCLURG & CO.

indulged in no comment, his eyes perceiving a pathetic pleading in her upturned face. Suddenly there came to him a belief that the girl was crying; he could feel the slight tremor of her form against his own. He glanced furtively at her, only to catch the glitter of a falling tear. To her evident distress, his heart made instant and sympathetic response. With all respect influencing the action, his hand closed warmly over the smaller one on his sleeve.

"Little girl," he said, forgetting the shortness of their acquaintance in the deep feeling of the moment, "tell me what the trouble is."

"I suppose you think me an awful creature for saying that," she blurted out, without looking up. "It wasn't ladylike or nice, but—but I simply couldn't help it, Lieut. Brant."

"You mean your sudden determination to carry me home with you?" he asked, relieved to think this might prove the entire difficulty. "Don't let that worry you. Why, I am simply rejoiced at being permitted to go. Do you know, I wanted to request the privilege all the time we were dancing together. But you acted so differently from when we were beneath the vines that I actually lost my nerve."

She looked up and he caught a fleeting glimpse into her unveiled eyes.

"I did not wish you to ask me."

"What?" He stopped suddenly. "Why, then, did you make such an announcement to Mrs. Herndon?"

"Oh, that was different," she explained, uneasily. "I had to do that; I had to trust you to help me out, but—but I really wanted to go home alone."

He swept his unbelieving eyes around over the deserted night scene, not knowing what answer to return to so strange an avowal. "Was that what caused you to appear so distant to me in the hall, so vastly different from what you had been before?"

She nodded, but with her gaze still upon the ground.

"Miss Naida," he said, "it would be cowardly for me to attempt to dodge this issue between us. Is it because you do not like me?"

She looked up quickly, the moonlight revealing her flushed face.

"Oh, no, no! you must never think that. I told you I was a girl of moods; under those vines I had one mood, in the hall another. Cannot you understand?"

"Very little," he admitted, "for I am more inclined to believe you are the possessor of a strong will than that you are swayed by moods. Listen. If I thought that a mere senseless mood had caused your peculiar treatment of me to-night, I should feel justified in yielding to a mood also. But I will not lower you to that extent in my estimation; I prefer to believe that you are the true-hearted, frankly spoken girl of the vine shadow. It is this abiding conviction as to your true nature which holds me loyal to a test. Miss Naida, is it now your desire that I leave you?"

He stepped aside, relinquishing her arm, his hat in hand, but she did not move from where he left her.

"It—it hurts me," she faltered, "for I truly desire you to think in that way of me, and I—I don't know what is best to do. If I tell you why I wished to come alone, you might misunderstand; and if I refuse, then you will suspect wrong, and go away despising me."

"I sincerely wish you might repose sufficient confidence in me as a gentleman to believe I never betray a trust, never pry into a lady's secret."

"Oh, I do, Lieut. Brant. It is not doubt of you at all; but I am not sure, even within my own heart, that I am doing just what is right. Besides, it will be so difficult to make you, almost a stranger, comprehend the peculiar conditions which influence my action. Even now you suspect that I am deceitful—a masked sham like those others we discussed to-night; but I have never played a part before, never skulked in the dark. To-night I simply had to do it."

"Do You Really Think I am So Very Bad, Because—Because I Like Bob Hampton?"

"Then attempt no explanation," he said, gently, "and believe me, I shall continue to trust you. To-night, whatever you wish may be, I will abide by it. Shall I go or stay? In either case you have nothing to fear."

She drew a deep breath, these open words of faith touching her more strongly than would any selfish faultfinding.

"Trust begets trust," she replied, with new firmness, and now gazing frankly into his face. "You can walk with me a portion of the way if you wish, but I am going to tell you the truth,—I have an appointment with a man."

"I naturally regret to learn this," he said, with assumed calmness. "But the way is so lonely I prefer walking with you until you have some other protector."

She accepted his proffered arm, feeling the constraint in his tone, the formality in his manner, most keenly. An older woman might have resented it, but it only served to sadden and embarrass her. He began speaking of the quiet beauty of the night, but she had no thought of what he was saying.

"Lieut. Brant," she said, at last, "you do not ask me who the man is."

"Certainly not, Miss Naida; it is none of my business."

"I think, perhaps, it might be; the knowledge might help you to understand. It is Bob Hampton."

He stared at her. "The gambler? No wonder, then, your meeting is clandestine."

She replied indignantly, her lips trembling. "He is not a gambler; he is a miner, over in the Black Range. He has not touched a card in two years."

"Oh, reformed has he? And are you the instrument that has worked such a miracle?"

Her eyes fell. "I don't know, but I hope so." Then she glanced up again, wondering at his continued silence. "Don't you understand yet?"

"Only that you are secretly meeting a man of the worst reputation, one known the length and breadth of this border as a gambler and fighter."

"Yes; but—but don't you know who I am?"

He smiled grimly, wondering what possible difference that could make. "Certainly; you are Miss Naida Herndon."

"I? You have not known? Lieut. Brant, I am Naida Gillis."

He stopped still, again facing her. "Naida Gillis? Do you mean old Gillis' girl? Is it possible you are the same we rescued on the prairie two years ago?"

She bowed her head. "Yes; do you understand now why I trust this Bob Hampton?"

"I perhaps might comprehend why you should feel grateful to him, but not why you should thus consent to meet with him clandestinely."

He could not see the deep flush upon her cheeks, but he was not deaf to the pitiful falter in her voice.

"Because he has been good and true to me," she explained, frankly, "better than anybody else in all the world. I don't care what you say, you and those others who do not know him, but I believe in him; I think he is a man. They won't let me see him, the Herndons, nor permit him to come to the house. He has not been in Glencaid for two years, until yesterday. The Indian rising has driven all the miners out from the Black Range, and he came down here for no other purpose than to get a glimpse of me, and learn how I was getting on. I—I saw him over at the hotel just for a moment—Mrs. Guffy handed me a note—and I—I had only just left him when I encountered you at the door. I wanted to see him again, to talk with him longer, but I couldn't manage to get away from you, and I didn't know what to do. There, I've told it all; do you really think I am so very bad, because—because I like Bob Hampton?"

He stood a moment completely nonplussed, yet compelled to answer.

"I certainly have no right to question your motives," he said, at last, "and I believe your purposes to be above reproach. I wish I might give the same credit to this man Hampton. But, Miss Naida, the world does not often consent to judge us by our own estimation of right and wrong; it prefers to place its own interpretation on acts, and thus often condemns the innocent. Others might not see this as I do, nor have such unquestioning faith in you."

"I know," she admitted, stubbornly, "but I wanted to see him; I have been so lonely for him, and this was the only possible way."

Brant felt a wave of uncontrolable sympathy sweep across him, even while he was beginning to hate this man, who, he felt, had stolen a passage into the innocent heart of a girl not half his age, one knowing little of the ways of the world.

"May I walk beside you until you meet him?" he asked.

"You will not quarrel?"

"No; at least not through any fault of mine."

A few steps in the moonlight and she again took his arm, although they scarcely spoke. At the bridge she withdrew her hand and uttered a peculiar call, and Hampton stepped forth from the concealing bushes, his head bare, his hat in his hand.

"I scarcely thought it could be you," he said, seemingly not altogether satisfied, "as you were accompanied by another."

The younger man took a single step forward, his uniform showing in the moonlight. "Miss Gillis will inform you later why I am here," he said, striving to speak civilly. "You and I, however, have met before—I am Lieut. Brant, of the Seventh cavalry."

Hampton bowed, his manner somewhat stiff and formal, his face impenetrable.

"I should have left Miss Gillis previous to her meeting with you," Brant continued, "but I desired to request the privilege of calling upon you tomorrow for a brief interview."

"With pleasure."

"Shall it be at ten?"

"The hour is perfectly satisfactory. You will find me at the hotel."

"You place me under obligations," said Brant, and turned toward the wondering girl. "I will now say goodnight, Miss Gillis, and I promise to remember only the pleasant events of this evening."

Their hands met for an instant of warm pressure, and then the two left behind stood motionless and watched him striding along the moonlit road.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Verge of a Quarrel.

Brant's mind was a chaos of conflicting emotions, but a single abiding conviction never once left him—he retained implicit faith in her, and he purposed to fight this matter out with Hampton. Even in that crucial hour, had any one ventured to suggest that he was in love with Naida, he would merely have laughed, serenely confident that nothing more than gentlemanly interest swayed his conduct.

Nevertheless, he manifested an unreasonable dislike for Hampton. He had never before felt thus toward this person; indeed, he had possessed a strong man's natural admiration for the other's physical power and cool, determined courage. He now sincerely feared Hampton's power over the innocent mind of the girl, imagining his influence to be much stronger than it really was, and he sought after some suitable means for overcoming it. He alone, among those who might be considered as her true friends, knew of her secret infatuation, and upon him, alone, therefore, rested the burden of her release. It was his heart that drove him into such a decision, although he conceived it then to be the reasoning of the brain.

And so she was Naida Gillis, poor old Gillis' little girl! He stopped suddenly in the road, striving to realize the thought. He had never dreamed of such a consummation, and it staggered him. What was there in common between that outcast, and this well-groomed, frankly spoken young woman? Yet, whoever she was or had been, the remembrance of her could not be conjured out of his brain. He might look back with repugnance upon those others, those misty phantoms of the past, but the vision of his mind, his ever-changeable divinity of the vine shadows, would not become obscured, nor grow less fascinating. Suddenly there occurred to him a recollection of Silent Murphy, and his strange, unguarded remark. What could the fellow have meant? Was there indeed some secret in the life history of this young girl?—some story of shame, perhaps? If so, did Hampton know about it?

Already daylight rested white and solemn over the silent valley, and only a short distance away lay the spot where the crippled scout had made his solitary camp. Almost without volition the young officer turned that way, crossed the stream by means of the log, and clambered up the bank. But it was clear at a glance that Murphy had deserted the spot. Convinced of this, Brant retraced his steps toward the camp of his own troop, now already astir with the duties of early morning. Just in front of his tent he encountered his first sergeant.

"Watson," he questioned, as the latter saluted and stood at attention, "do you know a man called Silent Murphy?"

"The scout? Yes, sir; knew him as long ago as when he was corporal in your father's troop. He was reduced to the ranks for striking an officer."

Brant wheeled in astonishment. "Was he ever a soldier in the Seventh?"

"He was that, for two enlistments, and a mighty tough one; but he was always quick enough for a fight in field or garrison."

"Has he shown himself here at the camp?"

"No, sir; didn't know he was anywhere around. He and I were never very good friends, sir."

The lieutenant remained silent for several moments, endeavoring to perfect some feasible plan.

"Dispatch an order to the telegraph office," he finally commanded, "to inquire if this man Murphy receives any messages there, and if they know where he is stopping. Send an intelligent man and have him discover all the facts he can. When he returns bring him in to me."

He had enjoyed a bath and a shave, and was yet lingering over his coffee, when the two soldiers entered with their report. The sergeant stepped aside, and the orderly, a tall, boyish looking fellow with a pugnacious chin, saluted stiffly.

"Well, Bane," and the officer eyed his trim appearance with manifest approval, "what did you succeed in learning?"

"The operator said this yere Murphy had never bin thar himself, sir, but there wus several messages come fer him. One got here this mornin'."

"What becomes of them?"

"They're called fer by another feller, sir."

"Oh, they are! Who?"

"Red Slavin wus the name he give me of thet other buck."

When the two had disappeared, Brant sat back thinking rapidly. There was a mystery here, and such actions must have a cause. Something either in or about Glencaid was compelling Murphy to keep out of sight—but what? Who? Brant was unable to get it out of his head that all this secrecy centered around Naida. Perhaps Hampton knew; at least he might possess some additional scrap of information which would help to solve the problem. He looked at his watch, and ordered his horse to be saddled.

It did not seem quite so simple now, this projected interview with Hampton, as it had appeared the night before. In the clear light of day, he began to realize the weakness of his position, the fact that he possessed not the smallest right to speak on behalf of Naida Gillis. Nevertheless, the die was cast, and perhaps, provided an open quarrel could be avoided, the meeting might result in good to all concerned.

Hampton welcomed him with distant but marked courtesy, having evidently thought out his own immediate plan of action, and schooled himself accordingly. Standing there, the bright light streaming over them from the open windows, they presented two widely contrasting personalities, yet each exhibited in figure and face the evidences of hard training and iron discipline. Hampton was clothed in black, standing straight as an arrow, his shoulders squared, his head held proudly erect, while his cool gray eyes studied the face of the other as he had been accustomed to survey his opponents at the card table. Brant looked the picture of a soldier on duty, trim, well built, erect, his resolute blue eyes never flinching from the steady gaze bent upon him, his bronzed young face grave from the seriousness of his mission. In both minds the same thought lingered—the vague wonder how much the other knew. The elder man, however, retained a better self-control and was first to break the silence.

"Miss Gillis informed me of your kindness to her last evening," he said, quietly, "and in her behalf I sincerely thank you. Permit me to offer you a chair."

Brant accepted it and sat down, feeling the calm tone of proprietorship in the words of the other as if they had been a blow. His face flushed, yet he spoke firmly. "Possibly I misconstrue your meaning," he said, with some bluntness, determined to reach the gist of the matter at once. "Did Miss Gillis authorize you to thank me for these courtesies?"

Hampton smiled with provoking calmness, holding an unlighted cigar between his fingers. "Why, really, as to that I do not remember. I merely mentioned it as expressing the natural gratitude of us both."

"You speak as if you possessed full authority to express her mind as well as your own."

The other bowed gravely, his face impassive. "My words quite naturally bear some such construction."

The officer hesitated, feeling more doubtful than ever regarding his own position. Chagrined, disarmed, he felt like a prisoner standing bound before his mocking captor. "Then I fear my mission here is useless."

"Entirely so, if you come for the purpose I suspect," said Hampton, sitting erect in his chair, and speaking with more rapid utterance. "To lecture me on morality, and demand my yielding up all influence over this girl—such a mission is assuredly a failure. I have listened with some degree of calmness in this room already to one such address, and surrendered to its reasoning. But permit me to say quite plainly, Lieut. Brant, that you are not the person from whom I will quietly listen to another."

"I had very little expectation that you would."

"You should have had still less, and remained away entirely. However, now that you are here, and the subject broached, it becomes my turn to say something, and to say it clearly. It seems to me you would exhibit far better taste and discrimination if from now on you would cease forcing your attentions upon Miss Gillis."

Brant leaped to his feet, but the other never deigned to alter his position.

"Forcing my attentions!" exclaimed the officer. "God's mercy, man! do you realize what you are saying? I have forced no attentions upon Miss Gillis."

"My reference was rather to future possibilities. Young blood is proverbially hot, and I thought it wise to warn you in time."

Brant stared into that imperturbed face, and somehow the very sight of its calm, inflexible resolve served to clear his own brain. He felt that this cool, self-controlled man was speaking with authority.

"Wait just a moment," he said at last. "I wish this made perfectly clear, and for all time. I met Miss Gillis first through pure accident. She impressed me strongly then, and I confess I have since grown more deeply interested in her personality. I have reasons to suppose my presence not altogether distasteful to her, and she has certainly shown that she reposes confidence in me. Not until late last night did I ever suspect she was the same girl whom we picked up with you out on the desert. It came to me from her own lips and was a total surprise. She revealed her identity in order to justify her proposed clandestine meeting with you."

CLOSING OUT SALE GOOD PIANOS.

Starts with a rush—large number of pianos taken first day of sale.

PIANO PRICES CUT ONE-THIRD TO ONE-HALF OFF.

Every instrument must be sold in ten days or shipped away.

PURCHASERS SECURING GREAT BENEFIT.

Store open evenings during this Great Closing Out Sale in order to accommodate those who cannot call during the day. Come and get an instrument while you can save a goodly amount. Your terms will be acceptable.

It is not overstating the matter to say that the closing out sale of the Hallet & Davis Piano Store is the greatest piano event Plainfield has ever known. The reasons for the discontinuing of this great piano store, as fully explained in our first announcement, shows the whys and wherefores of this Great Closing Out Sale.

Briefly stated, we find our wholesale trade is overtaxing the output of our factory, and that it is necessary to curtail our own retail branches to take care of this general trade, and the only satisfactory way is to close out at public sale. Hence, the closing out of the Hallet & Davis branch store in Plainfield at prices the lowest ever quoted on new and standard high-grade pianos.

People Get the Benefit.

"Give the people of Plainfield and vicinity the benefit of this great move," are the instructions.

Instead of boxing up and shipping the instruments away, an expensive and unsatisfactory way, we are going to sell them at wholesale and much less in some cases to the piano-buying public.

Public Has Seized the Opportunity.

To state that the public has been quick to seize the opportunity—the opportunity of a lifetime—to purchase the highest grade pianos at from one-third to one-half the usual price, is putting it very mildly. The first day's selling was remarkable in many respects; remarkable for the number of instruments taken; remarkable for the great number who called "to investigate," and most remarkable for the great enthusiasm displayed.

"Delighted;" "Much-pleased," "Has made it possible for us to realize our hopes in the purchase of a good piano," are the expressions one hears on every hand from those who are taking advantage of this great closing out sale on the event of the discontinuing this branch store at Plainfield.
